PREFACE

Cat. May 31 1901

TROILUS AND CRISEYDE is the only one of Chaucer's major undertakings which he brought to final completion. If less universal in its appeal than the varied pageant of the Canterbury Tales, it has, by way of compensation, the heightened power which comes from a work of creative imagination brilliantly sustained throughout a long and unified poem. It is of all Chaucer's works the most perfect expression of his art. In portrayal of character, in easy flow of dramatic action, in mastery of execution and grace of manner, it is the outstanding masterpiece of English narrative verse.

200-1102 Nov. 30 1901

For the integrity of its text Chaucer was deeply solicitous. The editor who has labored to purge the text of the miswritings and "mismetrings" which it underwent at the hands of the scribes and early printers, and to incorporate into it the final revisions dictated by its author's exacting taste, has thus the satisfaction of knowing that his work is in furtherance of the poet's own earnest wish. Fortunately the evidence is so full that this work of restoration can be done with a high degree of certainty. The principles on which the text has been constituted are set forth at length in the closing pages of the Introduction.

The work of an editor must always be one of many obligations. In the preparation of the text and variant readings, I have been reminded anew of the debt which all Chaucerians owe to the pioneer industry of Dr. Furnivall and his collaborators in the work of the Chaucer Society. It has materially lightened my labors to have in print literatim copies of seven of the manuscripts of Troilus, among them the two important manuscripts, Cp and J, which have served as primary authorities for my text. I have also had in my possession a complete and careful transcript of H4 made for Dr. Furnivall but never printed. When, some years ago, I undertook to complete for the Chaucer Society a study of the textual tradition of the poem, Sir William McCormick most generously turned over to me his collations of seven of the original authorities. It is a pleasure to express anew my gratitude to him. I have myself, however, verified in large part both these collations and the Chaucer Society prints, and have gone to the original documents whenever any important question of the text was at stake.

*In my commentary I have laid under contribution the work of all the scholars who have busied themselves with the poem. Most thoroughgoing is my debt to Dr. Skeat, the only editor hitherto who has given a detailed commentary. I am under particular obligation also to the work of Professor George L. Kittredge in his Chaucer Society volume, The Date of Chaucer's Troilus, and in his paper on "Chaucer's Lollius"; and to that of Professor Karl Young in The Origin and Development of the Story of Troilus and Criseyde. Other obligations I have indicated in the bibliographical list appended to the Notes.*

a more intimate character. It was he who, years ago, first taught my feet to walk in Chaucerian ways, and who, more important still, gave me the discipline of insistent accuracy, even de minimis, which is indispensable to the work of an editor. To him I have more than once turned for advice as to the procedure to be followed in this edition, and have found him always wise in his counsel and generous in his help.

In the Introduction I have tried to present within reasonable compass the material facts upon which the literary interpretation of the poem must rest; but I have not attempted, except incidentally and by implication, an aesthetic appraisal of Chaucer's art. Nor have I tried to discuss the grammar and phonology of the poem. The essential characteristics of Chaucer's language have already been established; such matters as still remain unsettled must await for their solution a critical text of the poet's other writings. They cannot profitably be considered on the basis of a single poem.

Instead of preparing a complete glossary, I have given in the Notes my interpretation of such passages as involve obscurity, and have glossed many of the less familiar words. For quotations illustrative of such words, I have usually been content to refer the reader to the appropriate section of the New English Dictionary. I assume that the reader of this edition will already be familiar with the common words and constructions of Chaucer's diction.

With the ever increasing attention paid to Chaucer in schools and colleges, the number of readers to whom his language is no longer a serious barrier is large. Both in the Introduction and Notes I have had in mind the needs of this class of readers as well as those of the much smaller group of special students. To the still smaller group—though we are after all a goodly company—of professed Chaucerians, those scholars whose own studies have helped to make possible such a volume as this, I “direct” my book, begging them in the words of our kindly master,

INTRODUCTION

I. AUTHORSHIP AND TITLE

THAT Troilus and Criseyde is the work of Geoffrey Chaucer is certain beyond dispute. It is referred to as Chaucer's in the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women (B 332, 441, 469; A 265, 431, 459), and in the "Retractions" at the end of the Canterbury Tales (I 1086). It is explicitly attributed to Chaucer in three of the surviving manuscripts, R, S2, and H3, and by Lydgate in his Sege of Troye and in his Fall of Princes.<sup>1</sup>

By what title Chaucer wished his book to be known is not clear. Perhaps, as in the case of the Book of the Duchess and the Legend of Good Women, no single definitive title was established in his own mind. In the Prologue to the Legend the work is spoken of allusively rather than by title—"How that Criseyde Troilus forsook"; though in B 441 (A 431) the name "Cresseide" is used as though it were a title. In the "Retractions" the work is called "the book of Troilus"; and the same phrase is used by Usk in his Testament of Love (3. 4. 258-9), and in the catalogue of John Paston's books (1482 ?).<sup>2</sup> Lydgate called the poem "Troilus and Cresseide"; and from Lydgate's day until our own the double title has been in general use. Recent scholars seem to prefer the shorter title "Troilus," used by Chaucer himself in the lines addressed to Adam, his own scribe.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> The testimony of the surviving manuscripts proves only that there was a divergence of usage during the century following Chaucer's death. H4 and Cp, in the colophons, call the poem "Liber Troili"; Ph and H2 call it merely "Troilus," S1 has a colophon which echoes the opening line of the poem: "here endeth the book of Troylus of double sorowe in loving of Cri[seyde]." H1, Cl, S2, and J have the longer phrase "Liber Troili et Criseydis." R uses the English phrase "the book of Troylus and of Cresseide." The five remaining manuscripts, of which four have lost the end of the poem, and so lack a colophon, furnish no evidence.

The colophon of Caxton's edition (circa 1483) reads: "Here endith

Troilus & Criseyde

That the division into books originates with the poet himself is made clear by 3. 1818:

My thridde book now ende ich in this wyse;

by 4. 26:

This ilke ferthe book me helpeth fyne;

and by the formal proems which introduce the first four books.<sup>4</sup>

There is, however, some ground for believing that the proems to Books II, III, and IV were not present in the poet's earliest intention. Most striking is the fact that they are omitted by R. Since R is consistently a  $\beta$  manuscript, we must assume that these proems, which are present in all the other authorities, had already been composed before R was derived. Nor is there any reason to suppose that they were deliberately omitted by a scribe, or cancelled by the poet himself. The only plausible explanation of their absence in R is that they had been lost from the original before R was derived; and such an explanation implies that in the original they had been added later on loose leaves. It Troylus as touchyng Creseyde." In the 1517 edition of Wynkyn de Worde the title reads: "The noble and amorous auncent hystory of Troylus and Cresyde in the tyme of the syege of Troye"; and the colophon reads: "Thus endeth the treatyse of Troylus the hevy." Pynson's edition of 1526 has, both in title and colophon, "the boke of Troylus and Creseyde." The folio of Thynne (1532) has the title "Troylus and Creseyde"; but the colophon and the running title use the shorter form "Troylus." Stowe's edition of 1561, and Speght's editions of 1598 and 1602, follow the usage of Thynne.

<sup>4</sup> In the Moutier edition, Filostrato is divided into nine cantos, of which the last is a short envoy. In the Paris edition of 1789 the divisions are different. In the absence of a critical edition, one can have no assurance as to the exact divisions of Boccaccio's poem in the copy which Chaucer used. But they must to some extent have corresponded with those given by Moutier; for Book II of Troilus ends at the same point in the story as the second canto in Moutier. Book III and Proem IV correspond with Canto III. Book IV corresponds with Canto IV. Chaucer's fifth book deals with the matter found in Cantos V-VIII of Moutier's edition.

is significant also that none of the authorities has any proem to Book V.<sup>5</sup>

A further indication that these proems were an afterthought may be found in the fact that the  $\gamma$  MSS. treat the proem to Book IV as a conclusion of Book III. The last two stanzas of Book III are addressed to Venus, and constitute a sort of exordium to the book. The first stanza of the succeeding proem closely continues the thought of this exordium. In all the  $\gamma$  MSS., save S2 and D, the proem to Book IV is not marked off in any way from Book III. At the end of the proem, CpClH1 have the rubric: "Explicit liber Tercius. Incipit Liber Quartus," and AD begin line 29 with a special initial. In S2, Book III ends at line 1806 with the rubric: "Explicit Liber Tercius," line 1807 begins with a special initial, and before 4.29 there is a rubric: "Incipit quartus liber." In D, a contemporary hand, apparently that of the scribe, has written in the margin of 3. 1807 the word: "Prologue." The "mixed" text of H3 indicates the termination of Book III with the erroneous rubric: "Explicit Liber iijtus"; and at the end of Proem IV writes: "Crt (Certe?) Sic explicit Liber quartus."

The proem of Book I must, however, have been present from the first. It is found regularly in all the MSS., including R.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>5</sup> The first two stanzas of Book V, which are based on stanzas of Teseide, are in the nature of a proem; but none of the authorities so mark them.

<sup>6</sup> It may be noted that in H1S2DigH3H4R the proem of Book I is not set off in any way from the rest of the book. In JCpClAD, line 29 of Book I has a special initial, but there is no rubric such as follows the proems of Books II and III (and, in J, Book IV also).

Though the division into books originates with the author himself, certain of the MSS. fail to indicate the division. Ph, which gives an a text throughout, originally indicated no break in the poem, save at the beginning of Book V, where there is a rubric and space for a special initial. Later the scribe himself supplied indications of books and proems in the margin, and by means of running titles. That these indications came from a  $\gamma$  source is shown by the fact that the proem of Book IV is treated as in the  $\gamma$  MSS. In the portion of H2 written by Hand 1, which is that of the same scribe who wrote Ph, there is similarly no indi-

II. DATE OF COMPOSITION

Chaucer's Troilus was completed and given to the public between the spring of 1385 and the end of the year 1386, or, at the very latest, the early months of 1387.

The second of these dates, the terminus ad quem, is established by the following facts:

(1) Troilus was already known to the reading public before the composition of the earlier, so-called B, version of the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, in which Cupid accuses the poet of having undermined men's faith in women by saying as him list of Criseyde.<sup>7</sup> Fortunately we are able to date the first version of the Prologue with a good deal of certainty. Professor Lowes has shown<sup>8</sup> that in it Chaucer makes use of the Lay de Franchise of Deschamps, cation of division into books. This portion of H2 includes the beginnings of Books II, III, and IV.

H3 indicates no break between Book I and Book II. Proem III is introduced by a special initial, and between Proem III and Book III there is an appropriate rubric. At the end of Book III is found the erroneous rubric, "Explicit Liber iiijtus," already noted above. The first stanza of Book V is treated as part of the preceding Book; and, after 5.7, is written the curious rubric: "Explicit ijda pars Vti Libri." Apparently the scribe regarded Book IV as "prima pars quinti libri"; for in H3 line 26 of Book IV reads,

Thys fyfte and laste boke me helpyth to dyffyne, where the correct reading is "This ilke ferthe book."

This curious aberration of H3 could be dismissed as mere scribal blundering, were it not that H4, a MS. which in this part of the text is totally unrelated to H3, reads in 4.26: "This feerde & laste book," and shows no break whatever between Book IV and Book V.

These readings of H3 and H4, taken with the absence of a proem for Book V, raise the question whether the poet may not have originally intended a division into four books only, the number of parts into which the Knight's Tale is divided. Such a supposition gains some support from 4.26-8.

This ilke ferthe book me helpeth fyne,
So that the losse of lyf and love yfeere
Of Troilus be fully shewed here, lines which seem to imply that the death of Troilus is to be transacted, and the poem concluded, in the fourth book.

Date of Composition

a poem written about May, 1385. It seems unlikely that Chaucer should have read this poem until some months after its composition; and Professor Lowes has shown reason for believing that he did not see a copy of it before the spring or summer of 1386. But a passage of the Prologue is imitated by Thomas Usk in his Testament of Love,<sup>9</sup> a work written not later than the winter of 1387-88. The publication of the Prologue to the Legend falls, then, between the summer of 1385 at earliest and the autumn of 1387 at latest, with the probabilities favoring the year 1386.

(2) Thomas Usk was well acquainted also with Troilus. In Book III, Chapter IV, of the Testament of Love, the allegorical personage, Love, cites as authority "the noble philosophical poete in Englissh," and the "tretis that he made of my servant Troilus"; and the book shows throughout a detailed familiarity with the poem.<sup>10</sup> The Testament of Love was probably written in 1387. Its author was executed for treason on March 4, 1388.<sup>11</sup>

(3) In 1387,<sup>12</sup> died Ralph Strode, the London lawyer, who is probably the Strode to whom Chaucer addresses his poem.<sup>13</sup>

The earliest date for Troilus, the terminus a quo, is determined by the following considerations:

(1) Chaucer can hardly have been acquainted with Boccaccio's Filostrato, the primary source of Troilus, earlier than his first Italian journey of 1373.

(2) In the account of the popular tumult aroused by Hector's opposition to the exchange of Criseyde, and in the author's comment on the blindness of popular opinion (4.

183-203), there seems to be, as Professor Carleton Brown has suggested,<sup>14</sup> a reminiscence of the great Peasants' Revolt of 1381.

(3) A date later than January 14, 1382, the date of the marriage of Richard II to Anne of Bohemia, is established, if we accept the brilliant suggestion of Professor Lowes<sup>15</sup> that the curious mention of the letter A in 1. 171 refers to the use of Queen Anne's initial intertwined with the initial R of her royal husband as a decorative device on courtly robes and tapestries, a use of the royal initials for which Professor Lowes cites documentary evidence.<sup>16</sup>

(4) In lines 624-5 of Book III, Chaucer supposes a conjunction of Jupiter, Saturn, and the crescent Moon in the sign Cancer. Conjunctions of Jupiter and Saturn take place at intervals of approximately twenty years; but the periodicity of these conjunctions is of such a nature that there are periods of approximately two hundred years during which a conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn occurs in any given sign at intervals of about sixty years, and other periods of over six hundred years during which the conjunction never occurs in that sign. Chaucer's life fell at the very end of one of these six-hundred-year periods during which Jupiter and Saturn are not conjoined in the sign Cancer; such a conjunction had not occurred since the year A.D. 769.

Now the conjunction which Chaucer supposes involves not only Jupiter and Saturn, but the crescent Moon also. In order that the Moon shall appear as a thin crescent, "with hire hornes pale," in the sign Cancer, the Sun must be in, or approaching, the next preceding sign, Gemini, and the time of year must be May or early June; for, according to Chaucer's calendar, the Sun entered Gemini on or about May 12. An approximate calculation, based on Newcomb's planetary tables, shows that on April 13, 1385, Jupiter and Saturn were in exact astronomical conjunction in longitude  $86^{\circ} 35'$ , i.e., near the end of the sign of Gemini, only three and a half degrees from the beginning of Cancer. But for the astrologer it is not necessary that the conjunction be exact; he would regard Jupiter and Saturn as being in "platic" conjunction when they are not more than nine degrees of longitude apart. In 1385 Jupiter entered Cancer on May 1; and Saturn entered Cancer on May 14. On the latter date both planets were in the sign of Cancer, two and a half degrees of longitude apart, and hence still in "platic" conjunction. The Moon was new on or about May 10 (within a day); and on or about May 13 the pale horns of the crescent Moon were visible very close to Jupiter and Saturn—the very disposition which Chaucer has represented in his poem, and one that previous to 1385 had not occurred for more than 600 years.

The conjunction of 1385 was remarkable enough to secure mention in Walsingham's Historia Anglicana:<sup>17</sup>

Conjunctio Jovis et Saturni

Eodem tempore Conjunctio duarum maximarum planetarum facta est, videlicet Jovis et Saturni, mense Maio; quam secuta est maxima regnorum commotio, prout patebit inferius, cum attigerit stylus locum.

It is to be noticed that Walsingham dates the conjunction as in the month of May, though the exact astronomical conjunction was on April 13. His interest in the event, as the entry shows, was astrological; and astrologically the platic conjunction in Cancer, which began on May 14, was much more significant than the exact astronomical conjunction of the preceding month, since it involved what the astrologers <sup>17</sup> Rolls Series, Vol. II, p. 126. The entry appears in nearly identical language in Walsingham's Chronicon Angliae (Rolls Series, p. 364) and in the same author's Ypodigma Neustriæ (Rolls Series, p. 341).

Troilus & Criseyde

called a "permutation of triplicities," i.e., a change in the zodiacal place of major conjunctions from the "triplicity" of Gemini, Aquarius, and Libra to the "triplicity" of Cancer, Pisces, and Scorpio, where conjunctions of Jupiter and Saturn had not occurred for six hundred years. Among the astrological results of this particular change should be floods and heavy rains, precisely the influence which Chaucer has supposed in the passage under discussion.<sup>18</sup>

We find, then, that Chaucer has introduced into his poem an astronomical phenomenon so unusual that it had not taken place until his time for many centuries, and one which entailed important astrological consequences. By bringing into his supposed configuration the crescent Moon also in the sign of Cancer, he has made it necessary that the phenomenon should take place in May or early June. In the month of May, 1385, occurred a conjunction which strikingly agrees with that which Chaucer has supposed, and one which attracted the attention of his contemporaries. It would be hard to believe that this is mere accidental coincidence. It is more reasonable to believe that Chaucer took directly from the night's starred face these symbols which he has woven into the high romance of Troilus. Since the passage in question was already present in the alpha text of the poem, it follows that the poem was not finished earlier than the spring of 1385.

It would not be profitable to attempt to push the terminus a quo still later by arguing that the lines in question are found a little before the middle of the poem. We have no data by which to determine the rate at which Chaucer's literary work progressed; nor have we any assurance that he worked consecutively from episode to episode of his story, bringing one to final completion before he began the next. We must be content to say that the completion of Troilus falls between the spring of 1385 and the early months of 1387, the latest possible date for the first version of the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women.

<sup>18</sup> For a more detailed discussion of the astrological import of this conjunction, and for a full statement of the astronomical data concerned, see article by R. K. Root and H. N. Russell, "A Planetary Date for Chaucer's Troilus," P.M.L.A. 39:48-63 (1924).

Date of Composition

The date 1385-86 accords with all the evidence summarized above, and with the known facts of Chaucerian chronology. By a writ dated February 17, 1385, Chaucer had been granted permission to administer by a permanent deputy his duties as comptroller of customs and subsidies, and hence should have had leisure for the prosecution of literary work. By 1387 he was already engaged on the Prologue to the Canterbury Tales. The displeasure expressed in the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, by Queen Alcestis and Cupid, at the heresy against Love's law in the story of Criseyde's falseness, takes on added significance as the echo of the sensation produced among English readers by a very recent poem.

Against this date there is but one consideration of any moment.<sup>19</sup> In lines 5245-56 of Gower's Mirour de l'Omme, an allegorical personage called Sompnolent goes to sleep in church, and dreams that he is hearing recited—la geste

De Troÿlus et de la belle Creseide.

There is good evidence to show that this passage of the Mirour de l'Omme was written not later than 1377.<sup>20</sup> If the <sup>19</sup> I think we may dismiss as the mistake of a not very reliable witness the statement of Lydgate in the Prologue to the Fall of Princes (283-7) that Chaucer wrote Troilus "in youthe," "longe or that he deide." In 1385-6 Chaucer was in his middle forties; but even in 1373, when he returned from his first Italian journey, he was some 33 years old, an age to which Lydgate would hardly have applied the phrase "in youthe." The date 1385-6 is sufficiently in accord with Lydgate's phrase, "longe or that he deide." It must be remembered that the very passage of Lydgate which contains these phrases says that the Italian book from which Troilus was "translated" bore the title "Trophe," a statement which is almost certainly a blunder (compare p. xl).

Troilus & Criseyde

"geste" referred to is Chaucer's poem, it would be necessary to assign Troilus to a date earlier than 1377. But such an interpretation of the allusion is by no means inevitable. Troilus was already a famous lover. If in the one surviving manuscript of the Mirour his lady's name had appeared as "Briseide" instead of "Creseide," the allusion would have been accepted by every one as a vague reference to the story as it is found in the Roman de Troie of Benoit. But the substitution of "Criseida" for "Briseida" seems to have been the invention of Boccaccio,<sup>21</sup> and there is no reason to believe that Gower read Italian. There is excellent reason, however, for supposing that, before 1377, Gower's good friend Chaucer was already acquainted with Filostrato, and if so, he may well have told Gower about it, and have called attention to the alteration of name.<sup>22</sup> In the face of the very strong evidence that Troilus is to be dated in 1385-86, the name "Creseide" in Gower's poem must be explained in some such way as this.<sup>23</sup>

III. SOURCES

As a narrative poem, Chaucer's Troilus is a work of great originality. One cannot exaggerate the startling sense of novelty with which its subtle blending of romance and realism, of sentiment and humor, must have impressed its earliest readers. Nothing like it existed in the literary

<sup>22</sup> Even Professor Tatlock (Development and Chronology, p. 221), who has argued at length that the reference in the Mirour is to Chaucer's poem, assumes that it was in conversation with Chaucer that Gower derived his slight but indisputable acquaintance with Dante.

<sup>23</sup> For a full presentation of the argument, based primarily on the passage in Gower, in favor of an early date for Troilus, see the article by Tatlock in Mod. Phil. 1.317-24 (1903) and the same author's Development and Chronology 15-33 (1907). Tatlock's argument is combatted by Lowes in P.M.L.A. 20.823-33 (1905) and by Kittredge in his Chaucer Society volume, The Date of Chaucer's Troilus (1909). It is to be remembered that Tatlock's discussions antedate the evidence offered by Lowes and by Carleton Brown for a date later than 1381, and the evidence based on the great conjunction of May, 1385.

Sources

world of the Middle Ages—English, French, or Italian. For the reader of today it is still one of the greatest of verse narratives, with that highest sort of originality which resides in its energy, its freshness, its truth to life. But its originality does not consist in the invention of a new story. Like many of the world's greatest poets, Chaucer was content to breathe new life into a story already old.

Among the fruits of Chaucer's journeyings in Italy was the acquaintance that he made with the Filostrato of Boccaccio, a very lovely poetic narrative of 5704 lines in ottava rima, which recounts the love of Troilo for the faithless Criseida.<sup>24</sup> So far as plot and dramatis personae are concerned, Troilus is a free reworking of Filostrato. The Italian poem, in its turn, is the poetic expansion of an episode found in the Roman de Troie of Benoit de Ste. Maure, and in the Latin paraphrase of Benoit made by Guido delle Colonne.<sup>25</sup> Benoit's romance of Troy is an elaboration of the meagre epitomes of Dares and Dictys. So that Chaucer's story is a more than twice told tale.

Dares and Dictys

It will be necessary to treat only in outline the history of the Troy story as it shaped itself through the medieval centuries. This history begins, not with Homer, but with the De Excidio Trojae Historia of "Dares Phrygius." The events of the Iliad include but an episode of the Trojan War—the wrath of Achilles and its consequences; neither the beginnings of the conflict nor the destruction of the city concern Homer's Muse. Moreover, as sober history the Iliad was discredited among medieval critics, because its author lived long after the events which he describes, because he is a pronounced partisan of the Greek side, and because he has included in his narrative such impossible details as the active participation in battle of the Olympian gods. To nearly all medieval scholars and authors, also, the Iliad in its original language was a closed book. If they read Homer at all, it was in the Ilias Latina of Silius Italicus, which long went under the name of "Pindarus Thebanus," an epitome which condenses the poem into some 1100 lines of Latin hexameter, with the total loss of all the qualities which make Homer's poem great.

<sup>24</sup> The printed texts of Filostrato give the lady's name as Griseida; and this form is found also in certain of the MSS. It is probable, however, that Boccaccio wrote Criseida. In any event, the substitution of Gr for Cr is but a detail of Italian phonetics. See article by E. H. Wilkins, Mod. Lang. Notes 24.65-7.

<sup>25</sup> Boccaccio seems to have used both Benoit and Guido. See the discussion of the matter by Young, Origin and Development, pp. 1-26.

The De Excidio Trojae Historia purports to be the work of an eye-witness, Dares the Phrygian, who was himself present in the beleaguered city.<sup>26</sup> It survives to us in forty-four short chapters,<sup>27</sup> written in wretched Latin prose, which lacks not only literary charm, but the most elementary qualities of style. There is a prefatory letter, purporting to be from Cornelius Nepos to Sallust, in which Nepos declares that he found the history of Dares at Athens, and has translated it literally into Latin. But the existing text, which certainly is not by Nepos, cannot have been written earlier than the sixth century A.D.<sup>28</sup> The narrative begins with the Argonautic expedition, and the first destruction of Troy during the reign of King Laomedon, gives a series of portraits of the principal Greek and Trojan leaders, recounts the various battles and intervening truces which make up the war, and describes the final destruction of the city.

Also the supposed narrative of an eye-witness is the Ephemeris Belli Trojani of Dictys the Cretan. The preface of this work informs us that Dictys was a citizen of Cnossus in Crete, who, with Idomeneus and Merion, joined in the expedition against Troy. During the war he kept a journal, written in Phoenician characters, of the events which were passing before his eyes. At his death, the six books of his journal were buried with him in a tin case, which was finally brought to light by an earthquake in the thirteenth year of the reign of Nero. At the command of Nero, the document was transliterated into Greek characters; and from this Greek text was made a Latin translation by one Septimius Romanus.

<sup>28</sup> Constans, 6.194. There is some reason to believe that there may have existed a longer Latin text of "Dares," now lost, of which the version which we possess is a condensation. For a discussion of this hypothesis see Constans 6.224-34.

This Latin version is more than twice as long as the Historia of Dares, and is written in excellent Latin, apparently of the fourth century A.D.<sup>29</sup> While the romantic story of the metal box and the earthquake need not be taken seriously, there is conclusive evidence that the Latin version is indeed a translation from a Greek original. A papyrus found at Tebtunis in 1899 contains a fragment of the Greek Dictys which corresponds with seven chapters of Book IV of the Latin version.<sup>30</sup> From the Greek original are derived also a number of Byzantine chronicles of the Trojan War, of which the most important is the Chronographia of Malalas (sixth century A.D.).<sup>31</sup>

The narrative of Dictys begins with the rape of Helen, and concludes with the return of the Greek heroes to their homes.

Benoit and Guido

On the basis primarily of Dares and Dictys, more particularly of the former, Benoit of Sainte Maure (near Poitiers) composed in the second half of the twelfth century his

Troilus & Criseyde

Roman de Troie,<sup>32</sup> a spirited poem in rhymed octosyllabic couplets, which extends to the formidable length of 30,316 lines. Up to line 24,425 Benoit follows the outline of Dares; for the rest of the poem he draws on Dictys, with still an eye now and then on Dares. But into the dull and tedious narratives of his sources Benoit puts life and color and movement. Like many of the medieval romances, the Roman de Troie is unduly repetitious and prolix; but it is none the less a work of genuine literary merit.

Of the additions which Benoit made to the story, the one that concerns us is the episode of Briseida, daughter of Calchas, who, sent from Troy to her father's gorgeous tent in the Grecian camp, forgets her love for Troilus, and gives her fickle heart to Diomedes. For this episode there is no hint in Dares or in Dictys—at least in the texts of which we have any knowledge. In the Historia of Dares there is frequent mention of Troilus, son of Priam, who is described as “magnum, pulcherrimum, pro aetate valentem, fortem, cupidum virtutis”,<sup>33</sup> but it is always as the warrior, foremost in the field of battle, with no hint of any love-story. Among the portraits of famous personages, Dares describes also Briseida, who is “formosam, non alta statura, candidam, capillo flavo et molli, superciliis iunctis, oculis venustis, corpore aequali, blandam, affabilem, verecundam, animo simplici, piam.”<sup>34</sup> But there is no hint of any relation of Briseida to Troilus, nor does Briseida ever figure in the narrative of Dares except for the portrait of her which has just been quoted.

So far as we know, it was Benoit who invented the story of Briseida's faithlessness in love. The story as Benoit tells it is only of the heroine's faithlessness; for it begins at the point where Briseida is to be restored to her father. Troilus is her accepted lover, but there is no account whatever of the course of their love before the separation is decreed. What we have is the portion of the story which fills Books IV and V of Chaucer's poem. The episode of Briseida occupies 1349 lines. Some 500 additional lines are devoted to the death of Troilus at the hands of Achilles. But the passages given to the episode are not consecutive; they are intercalated between accounts of the various battles. The episode begins at line 13,065 of the poem, and ends with line 20,682, or, if we continue to the death of Troilus and Hecuba's lament over her dead son, at line 21,782.<sup>35</sup>

In the year 1287, Guido delle Colonne, a judge of Messina in Sicily, produced in a rhetorical Latin prose a paraphrase of Benoit's poem, under the title of Historia Trojana. He somewhat abridged the long speeches and ornate descriptions of Benoit, and added passages of sententious moral comment and learned digressions; but he altered so little the narrative content of his original that a summary of any portion of Guido would be nearly identical with a corresponding summary of Benoit. So nearly identical are the two works in their substance, that in a majority of cases it is impossible to assert with confidence that Boccaccio, or Chaucer, is following the one rather than the other.

In accordance with the literary ethics of his day, Guido cites as authorities for his history the names of Dares and Dictys, whom he regards as the ultimate guarantors of his reliability as a sober historian, and suppresses all mention of Benoit. There is reason to believe that he had before his eyes the Latin text of Dares,<sup>36</sup> but his overwhelming dependence on Benoit is clear beyond any doubt.<sup>37</sup> It seems probable that he had never read the Ephemeris of Dictys.<sup>38</sup>

Boccaccio

It was the genius of Boccaccio which seized on the episode of the faithless Briseida, as it is found in the pages of Benoit and Guido, and made of it a unified and beautiful poetic narrative. What had been an episode in a history of the Trojan War becomes the dominant substance, while the battles about the beleaguered city become only a tenuous background for the story of passionate love and sorrow, in which Boccaccio saw an analogue to his own love for Maria d'Aquino, his "Fiammetta."

Boccaccio is responsible not only for this fundamental change of emphasis. He has of his own invention devised the whole story of the falling in love of Troilo, the wooing, and the final winning of the lady—all the events, in short, which precede the decree which sends Criseida from Troy to her father's tent.<sup>39</sup> In Benoit, and in Guido, the episode begins with Briseida's departure, and her status as mistress of Troilus is merely taken for granted. As part of his narrative machinery, Boccaccio created the character of Pandaro, a young courtier, friend of Troilo and cousin of Criseida, to serve as confidant and go-between in the wooing.<sup>40</sup>

<sup>39</sup> For his account of the innamoramento of Troilo, Boccaccio has drawn to some extent on another episode of Benoit's romance, the love of Achilles for Polyxena, on his own earlier prose romance, Filocolo, and on the actual events of his own relations with Maria d'Aquino. See Young, pp. 26-105.

<sup>40</sup> There is in Benoit a Pandarus, King of Sezile, one of the allies of Priam. He is mentioned but half a dozen times, and is in no way associated with the love of Troilus. There is a passing mention of a Pandarus, son of Lycaon, in Homer, Iliad 2.827, in the list of the Trojan allies; compare Virgil, Aen. 5.496.

Sources

Another modification in the story, for which Boccaccio is responsible, is the change of the heroine's name from Briseis or Briseida to Criseida.<sup>41</sup> In Homer there is Briseis, the lovely slave girl taken away from Achilles by Agamemnon, and so the occasion of Achilles' wrath, whose name appears in the accusative, Briseida, in Iliad 1. 184, and Chryseis, daughter of the seer Chryses, whom Agamemnon relinquishes at the command of Apollo. The accusative of her name, Chryseida, occurs in Iliad 1. 182. Dares mentions Briseida only in the portrait which he gives of her, and refers to Chryseida not at all. Dictys mentions neither name; though the two personages to whom the names apply appear as Astynome, daughter of Chryses, and Hippodamia, daughter of Brises. Benoit found in the text of Dares the portrait of a beautiful lady, Briseis, who bore no part in the story, and decided to utilize her as the heroine of one of his episodes. He seems not to have realized that the name Briseis means "daughter of Brises," and so gives her as daughter to the seer Calchas. From Dictys he later took over the Homeric story of the real Briseis, whom he knows only as Ypodamia, the daughter of Brises, and of Chryseis, who appears as Astinome, daughter of Crises.<sup>42</sup> When Boccaccio wrote the Filostrato, he was probably not acquainted with Homer; but his knowledge of Ovid was sufficient to show him that Briseis was associated, not with Troilus, but with Achilles. The third epistle of the Heroides is addressed by Briseis to Achilles, and conveys by implication an account of her history.<sup>43</sup> Of the associated story of Chryseis he could have learned something from Ovid's Remedia Amoris 467-84,<sup>44</sup> a passage which, if carelessly

<sup>44</sup> In Ovid's Tristia 2.373, a majority of the MSS. read Chryseidos, instead of the correct reading Briseidos; see Wilkins, Mod. Lang. Notes 24.67, n. 22.

Troilus & Criseyde

read, might suggest that Chryseis was daughter to Calchas.<sup>45</sup>

It would seem, then, that Boccaccio, even in his youthful days, when he composed the Filostrato,<sup>46</sup> was scholar enough to be troubled by the conflict between Benoit's story of Briseida and that found in the Heroides of Ovid, and to replace the name by the related name of Criseida. If this substitution involved a new conflict, at least the authentic story of Chryseis was less widely known than that of the true Briseis.

The Filostrato is a poem of great literary merit. If it is inferior to Troilus in psychological portraiture, in reality, in reflection and interpretation, it is superior to Chaucer's poem in simple directness and passionate intensity. Boccaccio has in large measure identified himself with Troilo, and has seen in the loveliness of Criseida the type of his own lady. Chaucer has told the story with a certain detachment. He is spectator rather than participant. He tells a tragic tale with the philosophic irony of great comedy. Boccaccio's narrative is sentimental, with no trace of humorous comment.

Chaucer and Boccaccio

For the main outline of his action Chaucer has been content to follow Filostrato faithfully; at one point only has the English poet drawn heavily on his own invention—the final surrender of Criseyde to Troilus. In stanza 131 of Boccaccio's second canto, the courtship of Troilo has progressed to the stage of an established interchange of letters, the lady's replies being sometimes lieta, sometimes amara. At the corresponding point of Chaucer's narrative his poem has reached line 1351 of Book II. Between this stanza <sup>46</sup> The date of the Filostrato has not been determined with certainty. A probable conjecture places it about 1338; see H. Hauvette, Boccace, p. 88. In that year Boccaccio was twenty-five years old.

of Filostrato and the moment when Troilo reaches his final reward in his lady's arms (3. 31), there intervene 336 lines. In a scene which Chaucer has not reproduced, Pandaro pleads with Criseida to have pity on Troilo, breaks down her half-hearted reluctance, and secures the promise that she will yield as soon as time and place may serve (Fil. 3. 21-30). In Chaucer's narrative, 1715 lines, almost a quarter of the whole poem, are devoted to this final stage of the wooing. Chaucer has added to the story of his own invention two extended episodes: the scene laid at the house of Deiphebus, where Criseyde is brought to the feigned sick-bed of Troilus, and there promises her ultimate surrender (2. 1394-3. 231); and the even more elaborated scene of the supper at the house of Pandarus, which ends in the union of the lovers (3. 505-1309). For the first of these episodes, Chaucer found a hint in Fil. 7.77-85, a scene near the end of Filostrato not otherwise utilized by Chaucer, which is laid at the house of Deifebo. For the second, Professor Young has suggested an analogue in the episode of Boccaccio's Filocolo in which the lovers, Florio and Biancofiore, are secretly brought together. There is no reason why Chaucer should not have known the Filocolo; and there is positive reason for believing that he had read it before he wrote the Franklin's Tale.<sup>47</sup> But in the present instance Chaucer's debt to the Filocolo, if there be any debt at all, is but a slight one, and confined to minor details of the episode. In each case we have a secret meeting of lovers arranged by a third party; but the scene in the Filocolo, which has many similarities with the secret meeting of the lovers in Keats's Eve of St. Agnes, is in its essential and characteristic features wholly unlike that in Troilus. It is possible that, when Chaucer represents the impatient Troilus as watching the arrival of Criseyde "thoroughoute a litel wyndow in a stuwe" (3. 601), he is remembering that

Troilus & Criseyde

Florio, concealed in Biancofiore's apartments, watched the merry-making "per piccolo pertugio" (Filocolo 2. 172).<sup>48</sup>

In the remainder of his narrative Chaucer follows more closely the story of the Filostrato. At times he translates or closely paraphrases the Italian for many stanzas together, at times he condenses, at other times expands. Throughout he frequently interpolates into the narrative passages of comment—sometimes in his own person as author, sometimes in the person of one of the characters.<sup>49</sup>

Up to line 1351 of Book II, the point at which begins the long addition discussed above, Chaucer follows, in the fashion just described, the first two cantos of Boccaccio's poem. The episode in which Pandarus learns from Troilus the secret of his love (1. 547-1064) is expanded to more than twice the number of lines which it occupies in the Filostrato (Fil. 2. 1-34). The episode in which Pandarus reveals the secret to Criseyde (2. 78-595) fills only 244 lines of the Italian poem (Fil. 2. 35-67). The striking episode in which Troilus, returning from battle, passes under Criseyde's window, and by his bearing reinforces all that Pandarus has said of him (2. 610-65) is developed from a single stanza (Fil. 2. 82), in which Pandaro and Troilo together ride by the lady's window. Entirely Chaucer's own is the <sup>48</sup> Professor Young has enumerated several other details in which the two episodes agree—the exchange of oaths, the use of rings, etc. These resemblances may easily be explained as the inevitable coincidences growing out of the general similarity of the two situations, each a clandestine meeting of lovers. But the student should see Professor Young's statement of the case, Origin and Development, pp. 139-68, and the adverse criticism of Professor Cummings, Indebtedness, pp. 1-12. If Young tends to exaggerate the similarities, Cummings tends somewhat unduly to minimize them. Young has also pointed out a number of passages throughout the poem where Chaucer's language may be paralleled with a sentence from the Filocolo. Among the more striking of these passages are 1.950 and 3.1192-3 (see notes on these passages); but even in them the evidence for indebtedness is not certain.

scene in Criseyde's garden where the heroine, musing on her new-found love, listens to the song of her niece Antigone, sung in praise of love.<sup>50</sup>

After the first night of the lovers has been brought to pass, Chaucer again follows Boccaccio's outline, though with a freedom only a little less than he has used in the first two books. In the latter part of the story, when he departs from his Italian model, it is, save for passages of interpolated reflection, chiefly because he has for this part of the narrative also before his eyes the version of the story found in Benoit and in Guido.

The Persons of the Story

The chief personages of Chaucer's poem are taken over bodily from his Italian original, but their characters have been profoundly modified by the alchemy of his art.<sup>51</sup>

Troilus, to be sure, remains essentially what Boccaccio made him—the brave warrior and passionate lover, valiant as a lion on the field of battle, as a lover all that the code of courtly love demands that a lover should be. Chaucer has appreciably ennobled his character, making him more the idealist. He has also heightened the trait of sentimentalism, the tendency to luxuriate in his sorrows rather than manfully to seek their practical cure. It is this trait of character which, in league with adverse fate, brings about his tragedy.

Criseyde has been more profoundly altered. Chaucer has shown in his portrayal of her character a power of subtle analysis thoroughly comparable with that of a Samuel Richardson. Her Italian original is simple and direct, a creature of sensuous instinct with a minimum of reflection, who, having once yielded her heart, moves forward to the full accomplishment of her passion with no need of elaborate stratagem. Chaucer's heroine, with all her beauty and womanly loveliness and grace of demeanor, has from the beginning of the story a fatal weakness—the inability to make a deliberate choice. She thinks always too precisely on the event. No sooner has the love of Troilus found lodgment in her heart than she begins to reflect on the lost liberty of action which must ensue on her acceptance of it. She makes no decision, but drifts with circumstance; and the circumstances are so cleverly manipulated by her uncle that, without the need for conscious decision, her desire is accomplished. Though clearly aware whither she is drifting, she seems to herself to have been trapped, and can, without conscious hypocrisy, reproach her uncle for the perfidy that has brought her where she wished to be. In the later books of the poem, when circumstance is beyond her uncle's shrewd control, she continues to take always the easiest path. It is easier to leave Troilus, heartbroken though she be, than to defy the decree of the Trojan parliament; it is easier to remain with her father than to brave the perils of a return, though she still intends to keep her promise to her lover. Though she never quite tears the image of Troilus from her heart, it is beyond her power to resist the wooing of the "sudden" Diomedes. And so she becomes the type of instability and treachery in love.

<sup>50</sup> The song itself seems to have been adapted from Machaut; see p. xlvii.

The figure of Pandarus, perhaps the finest example of Chaucer's art of portraiture, is almost wholly the creation of the English poet. Boccaccio's Pandaro is the cousin of Criseida (and of Troilo also), a high-spirited young gallant, not much differentiated, save in his fortunes, from the hero, Troilo. He is messenger and go-between for the lovers; but he has no need for elaborate scheming and artifice, and he is quite devoid of the ironical humor which marks his English counterpart.

In Chaucer, Pandarus is Criseyde's uncle, a relationship which suggests that he is by some years her senior. Yet he is young enough to be the inseparable companion of Troilus, and to be himself a courtly lover—though an unsuccessful one. As a friend he is untiring in his disinterested and loyal service, even when that service involves his own dishonor. For though the artificial code of courtly love blames Criseyde only for her final falseness to Troilus, it quite irrationally demands that her uncle be her jealous guardian. He is the most charming of companions—playful, witty, full of shrewd observation, never dull. He is always laughing—at himself and his own ill success in love, at the extravagances of his love-sick friend, at the irony of life which he so clearly sees. He is the dominating personage of Chaucer's poem, giving to it that pervading tone of humorous irony which is so characteristic of the poet who created him, and so foreign to the passionate intensity of Boccaccio's Filostrato.

Sources

The Conduct of the Action

If Chaucer has made much more subtle the characters of Boccaccio's story, he has also heightened greatly its vividness, giving to it a compelling sense of actuality.

One of the elements which contributes to this sense of the actual is the care with which Chaucer has marked the passing of his dramatic time. Boccaccio opens his poem in the springtime (Fil. 1. 18), but gives no further dating of his story beyond the fact that it is again springtime in Fil. 7.78. In Chaucer most of the important episodes are definitely placed in the calendar.

Troilus first sees Criseyde at the feast of Palladion, in the month of April (1. 156). It is on the third of May (2. 56) that Pandarus makes his first visit to Criseyde; and on the morrow of that day he persuades his niece to write Troilus a letter. An interval elapses, during which Troilus is alternately elated or depressed, according to the tenor of Criseyde's answers to his letters (2. 1338-54). Then comes the meeting at the house of Deiphebus, at which Criseyde promises full surrender. The time of year is not specified; but a reference to "Aperil the laste" (3. 360) shows that we are still within the first year of the story. There is again an interval, in which the lovers exchange letters, and occasionally see each other (3. 435-510). Then follows the first night together, which is dated as May or early June by the presence of the crescent Moon in the sign of Cancer.<sup>52</sup> Apparently an entire year has passed since the beginning of the wooing. The episode of Criseyde's departure for the Grecian camp begins in late July, when the Sun is in the early degrees of Leo.<sup>53</sup> At the beginning of Book V (lines 8-14), we are told that there have been three spring seasons since Troilus first began to love her. If one counts as one of these springtimes that in which the story begins, Troilus has enjoyed the full love of his lady during a period of some fourteen months. How long a time elapses between Criseyde's arrival at her father's tent and her final acceptance of Diomedes, Chaucer expressly refuses to say.<sup>54</sup>

But if the action of the story extends over at least three years, the great bulk of the narrative is devoted to the events of a few critical days. Three-quarters of the lines of Book I are given to the day on which Troilus first sees Criseyde, and to the day shortly after when he confides his secret to Pandarus. Beginning with Book II, nearly 5000 lines are devoted to the events of eight days, presented in sets of two, a day and its morrow. These four groups of two centre on Pandar's first visit to Criseyde on his friend's behalf, on the meeting at the house of Deiphebus, on the first night of the lovers, and on Criseyde's departure from Troy. Over 900 lines are given to the nine days which follow her departure. A few significant episodes are thus narrated in full detail, largely by means of dramatic dialogue, while the intervening intervals are dismissed with concise summary.

Chaucer's Use of Earlier Authorities

It is characteristic of Chaucer's methods as a literary workman that, when he undertook to retell Boccaccio's tale of romantic love in Troy, he was not content to follow his Italian source alone. He certainly consulted Benoit, and probably also looked into Guido.<sup>55</sup> In Book IV he corrects by reference to these authorities a mistake of Boccaccio as to the circumstances of Antenor's capture in the Fifth Battle.<sup>56</sup> Where Boccaccio tells us that Criseyde was exchanged on even terms for Antenor, Chaucer follows the earlier authorities by bringing in the name of King Thoas, as coupled with Criseyde in the exchange of prisoners.<sup>57</sup> In Book V he owes to these authorities Diomedes's taking of Criseyde's glove,<sup>58</sup> the episode of the fair bay steed, formerly the property of Troilus, which Criseyde gives to Diomedes,<sup>59</sup> Criseyde's gift to Diomedes of a "pencil of hire sleve" to be worn by him as a favor,<sup>60</sup> her nursing of Diomedes when he was wounded,<sup>61</sup> and the account of Hector's death at the hands of Achilles.<sup>62</sup> To Benoit he owes also the lament of Criseyde as she contemplates her own infidelity.<sup>63</sup> More significant than any of these minor borrowings is one which affects the very conduct of the story. In Boccaccio (Fil. 5. 13), Diomedes, after receiving Criseyde at the gates of Troy, conducts her to her father's tent without any attempt to pay court to her, deferring his love-making till a later day. Chaucer (5. 92-189) follows instead the authority of the Roman de Troie, where Diomedes begins his courtship straightway, and receives from the lady the reply that her heart is too sad for love, but were she to love, she would love no one sooner than Diomedes.<sup>64</sup> This borrowing from the earlier source, like a number of those mentioned just before, tends to emphasize the heroine's faithlessness.

In Benoit, and in Guido, Chaucer found repeated appeals to the authority of Dares and Dictys. There is no evidence that Chaucer ever read the Ephemeris of Dictys, though he once (l. 146) echoes Benoit by appealing to Homer, Dares, and "Dite."<sup>65</sup> There is no evidence, either, to show that he had read the prose Dares; but for the portraits of Diomedes, Criseyde, and Troilus in 5. 799-840 he has drawn heavily on a poetical paraphrase of Dares, written in Latin hexameters of considerable merit, made in the latter part of the twelfth century by an Englishman, Joseph of Exeter. This work is given by modern editors the title De Bello Trojano;<sup>66</sup> but in the three surviving manuscripts it is called "Frigii Daretis Ylias," or "Liber Frigii Daretis."<sup>67</sup> When he turned its pages, Chaucer may well have believed that he was reading the Latin translation of the original and ultimate source of Trojan history.<sup>68</sup>

Lollius

Great as is Chaucer's debt to the Filostrato, he never in the course of his poem, or elsewhere in his works, mentions the Italian poet by name. Nor does he ever speak of Benoit. "Guido de Columpnis" is listed among the authorities on the tale of Troy in Fame 1469, and as an authority for the story of Jason in Legend of Good Women 1396, 1464; but his name is not mentioned in Troilus. But, in suppressing the names of his actual sources, Chaucer had no desire that the reader should regard him as the inventor of the story. He assures us more than once than he is but retelling in English the history written by "myn auctour called Lollius."<sup>69</sup>

Sources

The name Lollius has long been one of the puzzles of Chaucerian criticism; and many attempts, some of them highly fantastic, have been made to explain it. If one begins with the testimony of Chaucer himself, one finds that "Lollius," or "myn auctour," is the writer of an "old book"<sup>70</sup> on the Trojan War written in Latin,<sup>71</sup> whose story of Troilus and Criseida Chaucer is following with scrupulous fidelity. That the name is no mere figment of Chaucer's artistic imagination, invented expressly as a supposed authority for his Troilus, is made certain by the fact that "Lollius" is mentioned along with other Latin and Greek writers who have treated of the Trojan War—Homer, Dares, Dictys, Guido delle Colonne, Geoffrey of Monmouth—as one of the "bearers up of Troy" in Fame 1468. Though the House of Fame has never been dated with certainty, there is strong reason for believing that it antedates Troilus, possibly by as much as ten years.<sup>72</sup> There could have been no motive for introducing into the House of Fame a fictitious name among the names of actual writers about <sup>69</sup> 1.394. "Lollius" is named again near the end of the poem (5.1653). When, as repeatedly, Chaucer refers to "myn auctour" (2.18; 2.700; 3.502; 3.575; 3.1196; 3.1402; 3.1817) or "the storie" (5.1037; 5.1044; 5.1051; 5.1094; 5.1651), one must assume that "Lollius" is the authority invoked. The name has the fullest MS. attestation; in 1.394, ClH; read Lollyus, Gg Lollyous, H4 Lolkius, W Lellyus, the rest Lollius; in 5.1653, R reads bollius, GgCx lollyus, the rest Lollius.

<sup>72</sup> See Kittredge, Date, pp. 53-5.

Troilus & Criseyde

Troy; so that we must assume that Chaucer believed in the actuality of "Lollius." For such a belief there is no foundation in fact; the most diligent search of modern scholars has discovered no author named Lollius who has written about Troy.<sup>73</sup>

The most probable explanation of Chaucer's mistaken belief, an explanation now generally accepted by scholars, was first offered by G. Latham in the Athenaeum, 1868, II, 433. According to this explanation, the idea that one Lollius was a writer about the Trojan War sprang from a misunderstanding of the opening lines of the Second Epistle of the First Book of Horace:

Troiani belli scriptorem, Maxime Lolli,
Dum tu declamas Romae, Praeneste relegi.

Properly these lines mean: "While you are practising oratory at Rome, Maximus Lollius, I have been rereading at Praeneste the writer of the Trojan War, i.e., Homer." Horace goes on to show his friend that useful moral teaching may be gained from the Iliad and the Odyssey.<sup>74</sup> If one assumes a manuscript of Horace in which scribal corruption had substituted scriptorum or scriptor for scriptorem, and in which the proper name Maximus was written without the initial capital, Horace might easily have been understood to be addressing Lollius as "greatest of writers of the Trojan War."<sup>75</sup> Whether the mistake originated with Chaucer, or with some one else from whom he took it over, <sup>73</sup> For the attempt, which dates back to Speght's edition of 1598, to identify Chaucer's "Lollius" with Lollius Urbicus, mentioned in the Historia Augusta as a writer of the third century A.D. who made a history of his own time, see Kittredge, Lollius, pp. 82-9. See also Hammond, pp. 94-8.

<sup>74</sup> Maximus Lollius, to whom is addressed also Epistle 1.18, was a son of Marcus Lollius, consul, general, and governor of Syria, to whom Horace addresses one of his Odes (Carm. 4.9).

<sup>75</sup> For various ways in which this wrong understanding might have grown out of a corrupted text of Horace, see Kittredge, Lollius, pp. 77-80.

we cannot say;<sup>76</sup> but we can feel a good deal of confidence that Chaucer had not read any Latin history of Troy which went under the name of Lollius. When Chaucer cites Lollius, he should, according to our notions, have cited instead Giovanni Boccaccio, who is in fact his "auctour," standing to him in the relation which he attributes to "Lollius."<sup>77</sup> But this does not mean that "Lollius" is simply another name for Boccaccio.<sup>78</sup> "Lollius," it must be remembered, wrote long ago, and in Latin.

When Chaucer read the Filostrato, he would inevitably have asked himself whence Boccaccio took the story. In Benoit and in Guido he would have found the latter part of Boccaccio's story, though with some notable differences in detail. For all the early part of the story, up to the time when Criseida's exchange is decreed, he, like the modern critic, could find no source. And yet Boccaccio, who makes no acknowledgment of his debt to Benoit or to Guido, says explicitly in the Proemio that he is following "antiche storie." What were these "ancient histories"? It is easily possible that Chaucer, misled by some stray bit of misinformation—possibly a scribal note in his own copy of Filostrato—actually believed that Boccaccio's source was an ancient history written by Lollius, "Troiani belli scriptorum maximus," that in retelling the story of Filostrato he was in effect following, though at second hand, the authority of the great Lollius.

Or, to vary the hypothesis a little, it may be, as Professor <sup>76</sup> No one has yet discovered any medieval reference to Lollius as a writer on the Trojan War save those in Chaucer. On the other hand, there is no evidence to prove that Chaucer was acquainted with the Epistles of Horace.

<sup>77</sup> Sometimes, to be sure, Chaucer cites "myn auctour" in support of a specific statement which is not found in Filostrato; see Kittredge, Lollius, pp. 92-109. In 5.1044, he expressly refers to an authority other than "myn auctour" in support of a detail actually drawn from Benoit or Guido. More than a single authority is implied in 5.19.

<sup>78</sup> For various attempts to make of "Lollius" a pseudonym for Boccaccio, see Hammond, pp. 96-8.

Troilus & Criseyde

Kittredge has argued,<sup>79</sup> that, wishing to give to his story the suggestion of antiquity and authenticity, he deliberately invoked, as a piece of literary artifice, the name of Lollius, supposed author of a lost history of the Trojan War.

Further mystification has been created for Chaucerian scholars by a statement of Chaucer's disciple, Lydgate. In the Prologue to his Fall of Princes (lines 283-7), Lydgate says of "my maister Chaucer":

In youthe he made a translacioun
Off a book, which callid is Trophe,
In Lumbard tunge, as men may reede & see,
And in our vulgar, longe or that he deide,
Gaff it the name off Troilus & Cresseide.

Lydgate was apparently aware that the source of Troilus was a book not in Latin, but in Lombard tongue, i.e., Italian;<sup>80</sup> but what he may have meant by saying that this Italian book was called "Trophe" no one knows; and all attempts to guess the riddle have been far from satisfactory.<sup>81</sup>

IV. THE RANGE OF CHAUCER'S READING AS SHOWN IN Troilus

In a preceding section of this Introduction we have considered those sources of Troilus—Boccaccio, Benoit and Guido, the paraphrase of Dares made by Joseph of Exeter—which contributed directly to the substance of the story. For the elaboration of his poem—for philosophic comment,

<sup>80</sup> I take it that Lydgate means that the book was written in "Lumbard tunge," not that it was a Latin book called "Trophe" in Italian.

<sup>81</sup> See Hammond, p. 98, and Skeat, Oxford Chaucer, 2. liv-lvi. The problem is complicated by the fact that Chaucer himself cites either an author or a book which he calls "Trophee" in Monk's Tale, B 3307, as his authority for a statement about the pillars of Hercules. For an ingenious and plausible elucidation of this citation, see article by Kittredge, "The Pillars of Hercules and Chaucer's 'Trophee,'" Putnam Anniversary Volume (New York, Stechert, 1909), pp. 546-66. Professor Kittredge makes no attempt to explain Lydgate's mention of "Trophe," which he is inclined to regard as a mere blundering mistake.

for illustration, and for poetic ornament—he has drawn upon the whole range of his reading; and this reading is extensive enough to justify his contemporary, Thomas Usk, in calling him “the noble philosophical poete in Englissh.”<sup>82</sup> Troilus is distinctly a “learned” poem.

Of these subsidiary sources, by all odds the most important is the Consolation of Philosophy of Boethius, a work which deeply influenced Chaucer's thought, and which he himself translated into English prose.<sup>83</sup> No less than nineteen separate passages in Troilus are derived directly from this treatise, passages which range in length from a single line to nineteen stanzas. In all these instances there is nothing in the corresponding portion of the Filostrato to suggest the Boethian philosophizing which Chaucer has introduced. Of these passages the most extended and the most significant are the discussion of Fortune in 1. 837–54, Criseyde's discussion of false felicity (3. 813–36), the hymn of Troilus sung to Love as the bond of all things (3. 1744–71), and the long soliloquy of Troilus on the conflict between God's foreknowledge and man's freedom (4. 953–1085). The ideas of Boethius are taken over not merely as poetical elaborations of Chaucer's theme; they are sum and substance of the deeper significance which he sees in the story of the tragic love of Troilus, a story which transacts itself in a world of which Destiny is the ineluctable master,<sup>84</sup> and in which Fortune, the principle of deceitful mutability,<sup>85</sup> is for ever turning into bitter vanity the hopes of man, and even the happiness which he seems to have achieved.

one are spoken by Pandarus.<sup>87</sup> In one of these instances (1. 960-1), the quotation is immediately from the Roman de la Rose; in another (1. 964-6) it may have come from Albertano of Brescia. It is quite possible that the rest are by way of some intermediate source.

Another source of sententious wisdom is the Liber Parabolarum of Alanus de Insulis.<sup>88</sup> From the same writer's De Planctu Naturae, a book laid under contribution in the Parliament of Fowls, comes the phrase "common astrologer," applied to the cock in 3. 1415—a fact duly noted by the scribe in the margin of H<sub>4</sub>.

There are in Troilus only three direct quotations from the Bible,<sup>89</sup> and these are from the writings attributed to Solomon—two from Ecclesiastes, one from Proverbs. Indirect allusions to St. Luke's Gospel are found at 2. 1503, and 3. 1577.

From the Metamorphoses of Ovid is drawn the very considerable body of allusions to classic myth with which Chaucer has ornamented his poem. It is to be noted that virtually all of these allusions are of Chaucer's own addition. Though Boccaccio makes free use of Ovidian myth in the Teseide, he has excluded it almost entirely from the pages of the Filostrato. Among the myths to which Chaucer alludes are Niobe weeping for her children (1.699-700), the horses which draw the chariot of the Sun (3. 1703), the bitter tears of Myrrha metamorphosed into a myrrh tree (4. 1138-9), Ascalaphus transformed into an owl (5.319), Phaeton's disastrous handling of his father's chariot (5. 664), the hunting of the Calydonian boar (5. 1464-79), the death of Meleager (5. 1482-3), the story of Nisus and his daughter Scylla (5. 1110). Characteristic of Chaucer's attitude towards the pagan deities is a passage in the third book, in which Ovidian myth is blended with astrology.<sup>90</sup> Twice (4. 789-91; 4. 1543-5) there is an unmistakable echo of Ovid's language.

Range of Chaucer's Reading

But Chaucer's use of Ovid is not limited to the Metamorphoses. The fifth epistle of the Heroides (Oenone to Paris) is definitely cited by Pandarus in 1. 653-5, who proceeds to paraphrase four lines of it. In 4. 1645 Criseyde translates Her. 1. 12. In 2. 1027 Pandarus echoes Her. 3. 3.<sup>91</sup> The Ars Amatoria is clearly in Chaucer's mind in 2. 1023-5; 4. 31-2; 5. 1107; and in 1. 946-7 Pandarus translates Remedia Amoris 45-6.<sup>92</sup> In 4. 1548-9 there is a clear echo of Amores 1. 15. 10.<sup>93</sup> I have found no instances of indebtedness to Tristia or to the Ex Ponto; nor is there clear evidence that Chaucer used the Fasti.<sup>94</sup>

Of Chaucer's intimate acquaintance with Virgil there can be no doubt; but he has drawn very slightly on him for the ornamentation of Troilus. In 3. 1495-8 there seems to be an echo of Eclogue 1. 60-4. In 5. 212 an allusion to Ixion, and in 5. 644 an allusion to Charybdis, may be traceable directly to the Aeneid.<sup>95</sup>

Ultimately from the Ars Poetica of Horace come two stanzas (2. 1030-43) in which Pandarus advises Troilus as to the literary style of his first letter to Criseyde. From the same source, apparently, are four lines (2. 22-5) in which the poet himself comments on the change which language undergoes "withinne a thousand yeer." However, the three passages of the Ars Poetica concerned are of the sort to be frequently quoted; so that we cannot assert that Chaucer knew Horace at first hand. Of indebtedness to other writings of Horace I have found no trace.

Troilus & Criseyde

Chaucer quotes a "sentence" from the tenth Satire of Juvenal at 4. 197-201, and names Juvenal as his authority.

Of the classic poets other than Ovid, Statius seems to have been most present in Chaucer's memory at the time when he was writing Troilus.<sup>96</sup> Pandarus finds Criseyde and her ladies reading the story of Thebes (2. 100-8), and special mention is made of the catastrophic death of Amphiaraus.<sup>97</sup> In lines 1485-510 of Book V the Thebais is summarized in some detail; and in the midst of this summary all but two of the manuscripts insert a Latin argument of the poem.<sup>98</sup>

When Chaucer wrote Troilus, he was already familiar with the Divine Comedy of Dante.<sup>99</sup> It would seem, indeed, that he must have owned, or at least had easy access to, a copy of the poem. In four passages of Troilus (3. 1262-7; 4. 225-7; 5. 1541-5; 5. 1863-5), he is clearly writing with the page of Dante open before him.<sup>100</sup> Almost as striking is the debt to Dante in 3. 1419-20; 4. 1538-40; 5. 599-601. The Divine Comedy was probably in the poet's mind also when he wrote 2. 1-6; 3. 45; 4. 22-4; 4. 473-6; 4. 1187-8. Of the thirteen passages just cited, seven are from the Inferno, and three each from the Purgatorio and the Paradiso. Of the four passages which are most closely modelled on Dante, one is an address to the Blessed Virgin, which Chaucer turns to the praise of Love; one a simile which Dante in his turn owes to Virgil; one the elevated conception of Fortune as the agency of divine providence; and the <sup>96</sup> For a general treatment of Chaucer's use of the Thebais, see B. A. Wise, The Influence of Statius upon Chaucer, Johns Hopkins Diss. 1911. Some of Dr. Wise's instances of supposed Statian influence on Troilus I am not able to accept.

Range of Chaucer's Reading

last the address to the Blessed Trinity which brings Troilus to its close. All of the passages where Dante's influence is manifest are of a character which adds to the tone of artistic and spiritual elevation which so markedly differentiates Troilus from the Filostrato. The influence of Dante on Chaucer's mind and art is not confined to the passages in which there is definite borrowing of a phrase or an idea. From Italy, and primarily I think from Dante, came the inspiration to tell the story of Troilus in the bel stilo alto, to write in the vernacular with the dignity and elevation which mark the great ancients. Particularly Dantesque is Chaucer's method of incorporating into his poem the philosophy of Boethius, and the considerable number of astrological and other scientific allusions which it contains.

Similar in character to his debt to Dante is Chaucer's debt to the Teseide of Boccaccio, a poem in its style as ornate and elevated as the Filostrato is simple and direct. Whether the Knight's Tale, in which Chaucer retells, though with much compression, the story of the Teseide, was written before Troilus or immediately after it, is a question to which no final answer has yet been given. But there is no question that the Teseide was already familiar to him.<sup>101</sup> Most important of the borrowings from the Teseide are the beautiful stanzas (5. 1807-27) which follow the soul of Troilus on its flight through the heavens—stanzas which are of prime importance in enforcing the philosophical interpretation which Chaucer has given to his story. Two other stanzas of Book V (lines 8-11 and 274-80), both of them in the grand manner, are closely imitated from the Teseide. Single lines are taken over in 2. 435-6 and 5. 1. Indebtedness of a more general character is found in 1. 659-65; 4. 323-9; 5. 295-322.<sup>102</sup>

<sup>102</sup> See also notes to 5.207-10; 5.304; 5.321-2. It is possibly worthy of remark that the debt to Teseide is particularly noticeable in the fifth book of Troilus.

Troilus & Criseyde

To the third of the great Florentines the only case of clear indebtedness is in the song of Troilus in 1. 400-20, which is closely translated from sonnet 88 of Petrarch.

The courtly literature of thirteenth and fourteenth century France, which contributed so heavily to the Book of the Duchess, the Parliament of Fowls, and the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, has little place among the influences which helped to shape Troilus. The only important exception to this statement is the Roman de la Rose, a book with which Chaucer was minutely familiar,<sup>103</sup> and which he had already, in part at least, translated into English verse. There are nineteen passages of Troilus which clearly show its influence, besides several others where the indebtedness is less certain. Of these nineteen passages, seven are from the portion of the poem written by Guillaume de Lorris, and twelve from the continuation of Jean de Meun. Sometimes<sup>104</sup> it is merely the turn of a phrase which shows Chaucer's debt; more often<sup>105</sup> a bit of sententious wisdom has been appropriated. Once (1. 638-44) a whole stanza of moralizing is taken over from the Roman de la Rose. In 3. 351-4 a bit of May-time landscape betrays the same inspiration. In other passages<sup>106</sup> it is a conceit or maxim of courtly love.

From the Paradis d'Amour of Guillaume de Machaut is apparently derived the general suggestion of the song in praise of love sung in 2. 827-75 by Criseyde's niece, Antigone.<sup>107</sup> Though there are no close verbal parallels, the general similarity of situation and ideas is striking. But with the Roman de la Rose and this poem of Machaut ends Chaucer's debt to the courtly literature of France, so far at least as modern scholarship has been able to discover. It is possible that Chaucer used the twelfth-century Roman de Thèbes; see note to 2. 100-8.

Besides bringing to his poem the fruits of a wide reading in Latin, French, and Italian literature, Chaucer has drawn also on his very considerable knowledge of medieval science. Most striking is his acquaintance with astronomy and astrology.<sup>108</sup> The Sun's progress through the signs of the Zodiac marks out for the poem the seasons of the year. The passage of the Moon from Aries to the end of Leo is to measure the period of Criseyde's return to Troilus. A conjunction of Jupiter, Saturn, and the crescent Moon in the sign Cancer causes the heavy downpour of rain which makes impossible Criseyde's departure from the house of Pandarus. Without exception these references to astronomy and astrology are accurately in accord with the best scientific knowledge of Chaucer's day. Thoroughly scientific is the discussion of the significance of dreams.<sup>109</sup> The poem reveals also some knowledge of physiology,<sup>110</sup> and an acquaintance with the distinctions of scholastic dialectic.<sup>111</sup>

If Chaucer has enriched his poem and philosophized its story by borrowings from such wise clerks as Boethius and Seneca and Alanus de Insulis, and from such poems as the Divine Comedy and the Teseide, he has not forgotten the homelier wisdom of the popular proverb. In the notes to this edition no fewer than fifty-seven instances are pointed out in which a proverb or proverbial phrase has been utilized. Twenty-one of these instances are in speeches of Pandarus; and it would seem that the poet intended the reader to recognize a love for proverbs as one of the marks of his character.<sup>112</sup> Fourteen proverbs are spoken by Criseyde; and sixteen occur in the comments of the author himself. Troilus invokes proverbial wisdom only three times, and Diomedes once. The presence of this considerable mass of proverbial phrases contributes appreciably to the effect of the poem. If the more literary embellishments which Chaucer has added make for elevation of style, the use of proverbs makes the poem at the same time familiar, colloquial, real.

V. MORAL IMPORT

The net result of all the additions which Chaucer has super-added out of his own reading to the story which Boccaccio had told more simply is greatly to heighten its seriousness. Chaucer's narrative is not only more human, more real, more genuine in its passion; it is much wiser. In the code of courtly love which Boccaccio accepts without question, Chaucer sees inherent contradictions and fallacies, which make for a tragic issue. The poem is, in truth, as Cupid in the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women calls it, a "heresy" against the "law" of courtly love. But Chaucer's wise analysis goes farther than this. In the fickleness and falsehood of Criseyde, a woman so lovely, so sweet and gracious, so much to be desired, he sees the type of mutability, of the transitoriness and fallacy of earthly happiness.

Boccaccio had dedicated the Filostrato to Fiammetta, his own mistress, and in his envoy had warned young lovers not to put trust too lightly in every fair lady, many of whom are, like Criseida, "unstable as leaf in the wind" (Fil. 8. 29-33). Chaucer's poem is dedicated to "moral" Gower and to "philosophical" Strode, a poet-moralist and a learned professor of philosophy. His warning to "yonge fresshe folkes" is that this world is but a transitory Vanity Fair, that only in God is there neither variableness nor shadow of change. And then, by way of enforcing his moral, he takes over from the Teseide, which had in its turn taken them from the Somnium Scipionis of Cicero, three noble stanzas (5. 1807-27) which follow heavenward the soul of the slain Troilus. From his station in the eighth heaven Troilus looks down upon the spot where he was slain, and laughs at the woe of those who were weeping his death, condemning our human pursuit of "blind" pleasure, which of its very nature cannot last.

Troilus laughs. He has not laughed before in the whole course of the poem since the very beginning of the story, before his first sight of Criseyde, when, himself heart-free, he made merry over the woes of foolish lovers. The ironist Pandar, though himself a disappointed lover, laughs often enough—a quiet, humorous laughter. He laughs even at his own ill success in love. But Troilus has set his heart too passionately on the things which at the very outset of the story, and now again at its close, he recognizes as "vanitee." He has taken life too seriously; now, like the poet who created him, he sees in life a high but comic irony.

It is in this spirit of a wise and thoughtful irony that Chaucer has conceived and executed his poem, a spirit poles asunder from the tender sentiment and ardent passion which inform the Filostrato. He has called Troilus a tragedy; and it is a tragedy in the medieval sense of the term—the story of a man cast down by adverse fortune from great prosperity and high estate into misery and wretchedness.<sup>113</sup> The five books into which he has disposed his story suggest the five acts of tragic drama.<sup>114</sup> There is, moreover, a quite tragic insistence on the idea of destiny.

It is "through his destiny" that Troilus first falls in love with Criseyde. It is destiny again which sends him riding "an esy pas" below Criseyde's window, at the very moment when Pandarus has disposed the lady's thoughts to answer love by love. Troilus, when the Trojan parliament issues its decree for Criseyde's departure, sees the hand of destiny at work:

Troilus & Criseyde

For al that comth, comth by necessitee;
Thus to be lorn, it is my destinee. (4. 958-9)

And so he debates the question of man's freedom and God's foreknowledge, inclining his argument to the side of predestination. The fall of fortune is made to seem inevitable and ineluctable.

And yet the story does not make on us a really tragic effect. It is rather a tragic story handled in the spirit of high comedy. Chaucer has not treated his theme with tragic intensity. Great tragedy leaves us with the sense of irreparable loss, of a hurt for which there is no healing. Hamlet dies with the unforgettably tragic words: "The rest is silence." The last we hear from Troilus is a peal of celestial laughter.

The poem is, of course, not written merely as an apologue, to point the moral that earthly joy is but "fals felicittee." There is full understanding and appreciation of its human values. The modern reader who dissents from this moral may disregard it, if he will, and find the story but little injured for his taste by its concluding stanzas. Yet it is no mere tacked-on moral. It is implicit in the whole poem. Of its genuineness, of the poet's complete sincerity, no one who has read Chaucer's other writings with attention can doubt. Chaucer is not so much pointing a moral, as giving us at the end his own verdict as to the permanent values of those aspects of our human life which are for the moment of such passionate importance.

For Chaucer, and for other of the finer spirits of the Middle Ages, this verdict implied no lugubrious doctrine of narrow Puritanism. Rather it made for a serene Catholic temper, which could thoroughly enjoy and understand the world, while still recognizing its "vanity," which could retain its serenity because it did not take either the joys or the sorrows of the world too seriously.

The story conceived by Benoit de Ste. Maure, and developed by Giovanni Boccaccio, has been reshaped by the creative genius of Chaucer, deepened and enriched in its human values by his keen observation, interpreted in the light of much reading and wise thought, and retold with exquisite grace and beauty. Much as it owes to "olde bokes," it remains—even for an editor who has laboriously scanned its every syllable, and pursued its every allusion—something perpetually fresh and new, one of the great original and authentic poems of the English-speaking race.

VI. THE TEXT

Troilus and Criseyde is preserved in sixteen manuscript copies, of which two, H5 and Dig, are incomplete.<sup>115</sup> Two of the early printed copies, those of Caxton and Thynne, present texts which are independent of the existing MSS., and therefore rank with the MSS. as authorities. The 1517 edition of Wynkyn de Worde is similarly an independent authority for the first 546 lines of Book I. All the other printed editions derive either from earlier prints or from MSS. still extant, and have, therefore, no value as authorities.

I have already given, in the publications of the Chaucer Society, detailed descriptions of the manuscripts.<sup>116</sup> The account of them given in the following pages is, therefore, of a more summary character. In the case of the printed editions, I have listed all the early prints, and identified the character of their texts; but of the more modern editions I have discussed only those which present a new text, disregarding, or at most briefly mentioning, those which are merely new printings of a text already published.

<sup>115</sup> There are also three brief fragments, none of which has any critical value. Three stanzas (3.302-22), incorporated into a short poem in rhyme royal, of which they constitute stanzas 4-6, are found in the Cambridge University Library, MS. Ff 1.6, fols. 150b, 151a. (Printed in the Chaucer Society volume of Odd Texts of Chaucer's Minor Poems, p. xii.) One stanza (1.631-7), with the title "Pandare to Troylus," is found in Trinity College, Cambridge, MS. R. 3.20, fol. 361a, a MS. written by Shirley. (Printed in Odd Texts, p. x.) Two strips of vellum, found in a book-binding, which contain longitudinal sections from 5.1443-98, are described in the Appendix to the Report of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, Vol. VI (1887), pp. 331-5. (This fragment I have not seen.) There are no variant readings in these passages which determine the affiliation of the fragments; but the last does not share a γ reading in 5.1449.

The Manuscripts

ADDITIONAL (A). British Museum, MS. Additional 12,044. A vellum manuscript, 10 x 7½ in., of 113 leaves, which contains only Troilus. It is written in two hands, both of the fifteenth century. The first hand has written as far as 3.1709; and the second hand has completed the volume, which has, however, lost its final leaf, and so terminates with 5. 1820. A later hand has made corrections and supplied missing lines.

A is throughout a  $\gamma$  manuscript, closely related to D, save for 3. 1345-414, a passage omitted by D, which the scribe of A has supplied from a source akin to GgH5. Besides the corruptions which it shares with D, it introduces many corrupt readings, frequently omitting words not necessary to the sense, but required by the metre. The readings of A, or of the AD parent, can be used to check those of ClCpH1 in reconstituting the  $\gamma$  original. In some instances, however, the AD parent has corrected  $\gamma$  errors.

CAMPSALL (Cl). The property of Mrs. Bacon-Frank, Campsall Hall, Doncaster. A vellum manuscript, 12 x 8¼ in., of 120 leaves, which contains only Troilus. It is beautifully written in one hand of the early fifteenth century, and was executed for Henry V while Prince of Wales, i.e. between 1399 and 1413.

Cl is consistently a  $\gamma$  manuscript, somewhat closer in its readings to AD than are CpH1S2Dig. Remarkably free from gross blunders, it is an authority of high value for a reconstitution of the  $\gamma$  original.

The Text

Cl has been printed by the Chaucer Society in A Parallel Text Print of Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde, and in a separate volume.

CORPUS (Cp). Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, MS. No. 61. A vellum manuscript,  $12\frac{1}{2} \times 8\frac{7}{10}$  in., of 151 + 2 leaves, which contains only Troilus. It is beautifully written in one hand of the early fifteenth century.

Cp is consistently a  $\gamma$  manuscript, somewhat closer in its readings to H1S2Dig than to ClAD. It presents the  $\gamma$  text with a high degree of purity, and is spelled with exceptional consistency. It serves as one of the basic authorities for the present edition.

Cp has been printed by the Chaucer Society in A Parallel Text of Three More MSS. of Chaucer's Troilus.

DIGBY (Dig). Bodleian Library, Oxford, MS. Digby 181. A paper manuscript,  $11\frac{1}{8} \times 8$  in., of 93 + 4 leaves, which, in addition to its fragment of Troilus, contains a miscellaneous collection of poems by Chaucer, Lydgate, Hoccleve, etc. The Troilus fragment, which ends in the middle of a page with 3. 532, is written in one hand of the fifteenth century.

Dig is consistently a  $\gamma$  manuscript, closely related to S2, with which it shares innumerable corruptions, besides many others peculiar to itself. Its value as an authority is negligible.

DURHAM (D). Bishop Cosin's Library, Durham, MS. V. II. 13. A vellum manuscript,  $11 \times 7$  in., of 111 + 5 leaves, which contains, besides Troilus, Cupid's Letter by Hoccleve. Troilus is written in one hand of the fifteenth century. Two other contemporary hands have made corrections and supplied missing lines.

D is consistently a  $\gamma$  manuscript closely related to A. Its text is, however, more corrupt than that of A.

CAMBRIDGE Gg 4. 27 (Gg). Cambridge University Library, MS. Gg 4. 27. A vellum manuscript,  $12\frac{3}{4} \times 7\frac{5}{8}$  in.,

of 516 leaves, which contains a miscellaneous collection of Chaucer's works, and Lydgate's Temple of Glass. It is written in one hand of the first half of the fifteenth century. The volume has been mutilated by the cutting out of illuminated leaves, and therefore lacks the beginning of all the books of Troilus, and the conclusion of all save Book II.

The text of Troilus, which is closely related to that of the fragmentary H5, is of composite character. In Book I, and through 2. 63, it is consistently a  $\beta$  manuscript, somewhat resembling the  $\beta$  portion of J. From 2. 64 to 2. 1209 it presents a "mixed" text, predominantly  $\alpha$  in character but with frequent  $\beta$  readings. It shares, however, in none of the distinctive JRH<sub>4</sub> readings so numerous between 2. 701 and 2. 1113. From 2. 1210 to 3. 398 it resumes its  $\beta$  character, with readings akin to those of J. At 3. 399 (with one earlier instance in 3. 243) Gg becomes definitely and consistently an  $\alpha$  manuscript, and so continues to the end. As an  $\alpha$  manuscript, it presents the text at the same stage of revision as does the  $\alpha$  portion of J.

The text of Gg is very corrupt. Some of its corruptions are shared by H5; but many others are not. GgH5 together constitute an important witness to  $\alpha$ , particularly in Book III, where the only other authority is H2Ph.

The Troilus text of Gg is printed by the Chaucer Society in A Parallel Text Print of Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde.

HARLEIAN 2280 (H1). British Museum, MS. Harleian 2280. A vellum manuscript, 9½ x 6 3/8 in., of 98 + 1 leaves, which contains only Troilus. It is written in one hand of the mid-fifteenth century.

H1 is consistently a  $\gamma$  manuscript, similar in the character of its readings to CpS2Dig. Its orthography varies but little from that of Cp. Comparatively free from corruptions of its own, it is an authority of the first importance for the reconstitution of the  $\gamma$  original.

H1 is printed by the Chaucer Society in A Parallel Text Print of Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde.

The Text

HARLEIAN 3943 (H<sub>2</sub>). British Museum, MS. Harleian 3943. A vellum manuscript, 10¼ x 5 5/8 in., of 116 leaves, which contains only Troilus. It is written in four hands, all of the fifteenth century, of which the first and second seem to be earlier than the other two. Hand 1 has written 1. 71-497, 1. 568-3. 1078, 3. 1639-4. 196. Hand 2 has written 3. 1079-638 (from which lines 1289-428 are missing, because of the loss of two leaves). Hand 3 has written 1. 1-70, 1. 498-567, 4. 197-406, and has supplied missing lines in the parts written by Hands 1 and 2. Hand 4 has written from 4. 407 to the end of the poem. It would seem that the scribe of Hand 3 found an unfinished and defective volume, the work of Hands 1 and 2, which he restored and corrected, subsequently turning over the task of completing the work to Hand 4. The scribe of Hand 1 is the same as the scribe who wrote Ph.

The portions written by Hands 1 and 2 present consistently an  $\alpha$  text, closely related to that of Ph. The portions written by Hands 3 and 4 are closely related to H<sub>4</sub>, and, like it, present  $\alpha$  readings in Book I, and  $\beta$  readings in the rest of the poem. Despite many corruptions, H<sub>2</sub> (with Ph) is an important witness to  $\alpha$  in the first three books, and after 4. 196 (with H<sub>4</sub>) to  $\beta$ .

H<sub>2</sub> is printed by the Chaucer Society in Chaucer's Troilus and Cryseyde compared with Boccaccio's Filostrato.

HARLEIAN 1239 (H<sub>3</sub>). British Museum, MS. Harleian 1239. A vellum manuscript, 15½ x 5¾ in., of 107 leaves, which contains, besides Troilus, selections from the Canterbury Tales. The text of Troilus is written by three hands. Hand 1 has written from 1.1 to 2. 1033, Hand 2 from 2. 1034 to 3. 1603, and from 3. 1758 to the end; Hand 3 has written 3. 1604-759, lines 1758, 1759 of Book III being written twice.

The text presented by H<sub>3</sub> is both composite and "mixed." The portion written by Hand 1 is a  $\beta$  text of a type similar to that of the source of Cx; but there are occasional indications, more particularly in Book II, of contamination with a  $\gamma$  manuscript of the same type as A. H<sub>3</sub> and Cx agree with  $\gamma$ SI against JRH<sub>4</sub> in the series of striking variants in 2. 701-1113. From 2. 1034 to 3. 1095, H<sub>3</sub> is fundamentally a  $\gamma$  manuscript of the same type as A; but in Book III it not infrequently deserts the  $\gamma$  reading, and shows occasional contamination with  $\beta$ . From 3. 1096 to 4. 299 it is again a  $\beta$  manuscript, with only slight traces of contamination with  $\gamma$ . With 4. 300 it becomes an  $\alpha$  manuscript, and so continues to the end of the poem, though a  $\beta$  reading appears in 4. 322, and in the latter part of Book V there are again indications of contamination with  $\gamma$ . In its  $\alpha$  portion, H<sub>3</sub> presents the text at a stage of revision not far removed from that found in Ph. H<sub>3</sub>Ph omit the free-choice soliloquy entire. In 4. 1301-442, H<sub>3</sub> has a series of unique readings which seem to represent a stage more primitive than that of Ph. At the end of Book V, however, it contains the Teseide stanzas, derived apparently from its  $\gamma$  constituent.

Throughout, the text of H<sub>3</sub> is extremely corrupt. This fact and its "mixed" character make it an unreliable authority. Its chief value lies in its testimony to an early stage of  $\alpha$  in Book IV.

H<sub>3</sub> is printed by the Chaucer Society in A Parallel Text of Three More MSS. of Chaucer's Troilus.

HARLEIAN 2392 (H<sub>4</sub>). British Museum, MS. Harleian 2392. A paper and vellum manuscript, 8½ x 5¾ in., of 145 + 2 leaves, which contains only Troilus. It is written in one hand of the middle of the fifteenth century, which has also supplied a large number of marginal notes in Latin.

H<sub>4</sub> presents a composite text, which in certain parts of the work is also "mixed." In Book I it is definitely an  $\alpha$  manuscript. It contains stanza 128, omitted by all other MSS. save H<sub>2</sub>Ph, and shares with H<sub>2</sub>Ph in a large number of  $\alpha$  readings. In Book II it is a mixture of  $\alpha$  and  $\beta$ , with the  $\alpha$  element decreasing in importance as the book proceeds. In 2. 701-1113 it shares with JR in a number of striking variants, the character of which is discussed on p. lxxx. In Book III it becomes distinctively a  $\beta$  manuscript, and so continues to the end, sharing in virtually all the  $\beta$  readings of Book III, and avoiding the many  $\alpha$  readings of Book IV. A striking instance of its "mixed" character is found in the fact that it contains stanzas 201, 202 of Book III twice over, once in the  $\alpha$  position with  $\alpha$  readings, and again in the  $\beta$  position with  $\beta$  readings. It omits the free-choice soliloquy of Book IV, an  $\alpha$  characteristic not shared by the closely related H2. With H2 it omits the Teseide stanzas in Book V. The adhesion of H4 to the  $\alpha$  tradition in the omission of these passages is surprising, since a contaminated text ordinarily incorporates lines found in any of its constituent authorities. With R, it omits the Latin argument of Statius in Book V.

Throughout, H4 is closely related to the portions of H2 written by Hands 3 and 4. In its  $\beta$  portions, the common parent of H2H4 stands somewhat nearer to R than to the other  $\beta$  authorities.

Though not free from corruption, H4 is purer than H2 or R. It is of the utmost importance as a witness to  $\alpha$  in Book I; and in Book IV, after J ceases to give a  $\beta$  text, it is an important witness to  $\beta$ .

HARLEIAN 4912 (H5). British Museum, MS. Harleian 4912. A vellum manuscript,  $11\frac{1}{2} \times 7\frac{5}{8}$  in., of 76+1 leaves, which contains only an incomplete copy of Troilus, ending with 4. 686. It is written in one hand of the fifteenth century.

H5 is throughout closely related to Gg; and its type of text is that already described in the account of Gg. It shares many of the corruptions of Gg, and has also many others of its own. H5 is of use chiefly for supplying deficiencies and checking errors of Gg.

Troilus & Criseyde

ST. JOHN'S (J). St. John's College, Cambridge, MS. L. 1. A vellum manuscript, 10 x 6¾ in., of 121 + 8 leaves, which contains Troilus, and, in a sixteenth-century hand, Henryson's Testament of Criseide. Troilus is written in one hand of the fifteenth century, which has also supplied a few marginal notes in Latin.

The text of J falls into two sharply defined parts. Up to line 430 of Book IV, J is consistently a  $\beta$  manuscript. Between 430 and 438 it becomes an  $\alpha$  manuscript, and so continues to the end. In its  $\beta$  portion, the text of J shows certain affinities with R. In 2. 701-1113 it shares with H<sub>4</sub> and R in a series of striking variants. A connection also exists between J and the  $\beta$  constituent of GgH<sub>5</sub>, which is most clearly marked after 2. 1210. In its  $\alpha$  portion, J presents the text in the same state of revision as Gg (here consistently an  $\alpha$  MS.).

In both portions, the text of J is remarkably free from blunders. Its orthography is throughout consistent, and strikingly similar to that of Cp. It is an authority of primary importance as a witness to  $\beta$  in Books I-III, and to  $\alpha$  in the last two books. In conjunction with Cp, it has been used as a basal authority for the present edition.

J is printed by the Chaucer Society in A Parallel Text of Three More MSS. of Chaucer's Troilus.

PHILLIPPS (Ph.). MS. Phillipps 8250, the property of T. Fitzroy Fenwick, Esq., Cheltenham. A paper and vellum manuscript, 8¾ x 5 7/8 in., of 325 leaves, which contains, besides Troilus, a miscellaneous collection of pieces in prose and verse. It is written throughout in one hand of the early fifteenth century, the same hand as Hand 1 of H<sub>2</sub>.

Ph is throughout an  $\alpha$  manuscript, except for the passages added later, on inset leaves and in the margin, which are from a  $\gamma$  MS. akin to H<sub>1</sub>. The scribe copied an  $\alpha$  MS. and then, after his copy was completed, supplied its deficiencies from a  $\gamma$  source. The hymn to love (3. 1744-71), the free-choice soliloquy (4. 953-1085), and the Teseide stanzas (5. 1807-27), are on inset leaves. Ph is closely related to the portions of H<sub>2</sub> written by Hands 1 and 2, with which it shares a great number of corrupt readings. Despite its corruptions, it is a very important witness to  $\alpha$ . It is the only manuscript which gives an  $\alpha$  text throughout the poem.

The Text

RAWLINSON (R). Bodleian Library, Oxford, MS. Rawlinson Poet. 163. A paper manuscript, 11½ x 8¼ in., of 115 leaves, which contains, besides Troilus, the unique copy of Chaucer's Rosamund. It is written in four hands, all of the fifteenth century. Hand 1 writes 1. 1-700; 2. 118-433, 1044-113; 3. 1373 to end of poem. Hand 2 writes 1. 701 - 2. 117; 3. 306-912. Hand 3 writes 2. 434-1043; 2. 1114 - 3. 305. Hand 4 writes 3. 913-1372. Each scribe has written marginal notes in English and in Latin. The volume seems to be the work of a group of associated scribes. The character of the text does not change significantly with the change of scribes.

R is throughout consistently a  $\beta$  manuscript of the same type as the  $\beta$  portions of J and H<sub>4</sub>, with which it shares in a series of distinctive readings, apparently authentic, in 2. 701-1113. There is no evidence of any close relationship with any of the  $\beta$  authorities. Moreover, R has certain unique characteristics: it omits the proems of Books II-IV, and contains after 2. 1750 a unique stanza, which seems to be genuine. With H<sub>4</sub>, it omits the Latin argument of Statius (5. 1498).

Despite manifold corruptions, R is an important witness to the text of  $\beta$ . It is the only manuscript which gives a  $\beta$  text throughout the poem.

SELDEN B 24 (S1). Bodleian Library, Oxford, MS. Selden B 24. A paper manuscript, 10¼ x 6 5/8 in., of 231 leaves, which contains, besides Troilus, a miscellaneous collection of English and Scottish verse of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, among which is the unique copy of the Kingis Quair. The first 209 leaves, including the whole of Troilus, are by one scribe, probably a Scotchman named James Graye. The MS. was executed not earlier than 1489.

S1 presents a "mixed" text, based on a  $\gamma$  authority akin to AD, and a  $\beta$  authority of the same general type as Cx and the  $\beta$  portions of H3. Up to 2. 617 it shares virtually all  $\gamma$  readings, and shows only slight traces of  $\beta$  influence. In the remainder of Book II it shares only occasionally in distinctive  $\gamma$  readings; but in 2. 701-1113, where JRH4 depart from the other  $\beta$  authorities, S1 agrees with  $\gamma$ H3Cx. In Book III it shares in some fifteen  $\gamma$  readings, and in over sixty  $\beta$  readings, with stanzas 201, 202 in the  $\beta$  position. In Book IV it shares in twenty-four  $\gamma$  readings, but has stanza 106, which  $\gamma$  omits. In Book V it shares in twenty-four out of thirty-five  $\gamma$  readings, but has lines 60, 61 in the  $\alpha\beta$  order. It would seem that the method of its scribe-editor was to take a  $\beta$  exemplar and "correct" it to  $\gamma$  readings, thoroughly at the beginning, and thereafter only spasmodically.

Despite a superficial Scottish cast, which results from the consistent writing of qub for wh and from the use of the Northern pronominal forms thair and tham, the text of S1 is remarkably free from corruption; but its value is greatly impaired by its "mixed" and "edited" character. Its witness to the well attested text of  $\gamma$  is usually superfluous; as an authority for  $\beta$ , it can be used only with caution.

SELDEN, SUPRA 56 (S2). Bodleian Library, Oxford, MS. Selden, Supra 56. A paper manuscript,  $8\frac{3}{4} \times 5\frac{5}{8}$  in., of 106+1 leaves, which contains only Troilus. It is neatly written in one hand. The colophon gives the date of its transcription as 1441.

S2 is throughout a  $\gamma$  manuscript, closely related to the fragmentary Dig, with which it shares innumerable corruptions. Dialectally it is strongly marked by Northern forms. With Dig, it is occasionally of use in determining a  $\gamma$  reading where the other evidence is confused; but with the generous attestation of  $\gamma$ , its evidence is seldom needed.

The Text

The Printed Editions

CAXTON'S EDITION circa 1483 (Cx). Caxton's edition of Troilus, the editio princeps of the poem, is a small folio of 120 leaves, of which the first and the last two are blanks. There is no title; the colophon reads: "Here endith Troylus / as touchyng Creseyde / Explicit per Caxton." The book was probably issued in 1483. Four copies are known to exist. Two, one of which lacks a few leaves, are in the British Museum, one in the library of St. John's College, Oxford, and one in the John Rylands Library at Manchester. Besides these, there is a fragment of eight leaves in the British Museum.<sup>117</sup> A rotographic reproduction of the perfect British Museum copy is deposited in the Library of Congress at Washington.<sup>118</sup> This reproduction has been collated for the present edition.

Despite its beautiful letter-press, Caxton's edition is very carelessly edited. It must have been printed from a single corrupt and defective manuscript. Had any attempt been made to collate it with any other authority, Caxton would certainly have supplied its missing passages. Twice an eight-stanza leaf of the manuscript copy was reversed.<sup>119</sup> Three times a leaf of the original was missing, with consequent omission of eight stanzas.<sup>120</sup> Five stanzas are omitted at 3. 442-476. A number of lines and short passages show unique corruptions, which may be attributed to the conjectural emendation of Caxton's editing.

Caxton's manuscript was consistently of the  $\beta$  type, and was similar in character to the  $\beta$  portions of  $H_3$ .  $H_3Cx$  agree with  $\gamma S_1$ , as against  $JRH_4$ , in a series of striking variants in lines 701-1113 of Book II. Despite its corruptions,  $Cx$  is an important witness to the text of  $\beta$ . Its value is increased by the fact that it reproduces, however corruptly, a single lost manuscript.

WYNKYN DE WORDE'S EDITION 1517 (W). In 1517, Wynkyn de Worde published Troilus in a small quarto of 139 + 2 leaves, of which the first and the last are flyleaves. There are 23 quires, alternately of eight and four leaves each. Title (fol. a 1): "The noble and ameraus auncyent hystory of Troylus and Cresyde, in the tyme of the syege of Troye. Compyled by Geffraye Chaucer." Below the title is a wood-cut of the hero and heroine. The text begins on fol. a 2 ro. A wood-cut introduces each of the succeeding books. Colophon:

Thus endeth the treatyse / of Troylus the hevvy
By Geffraye Chaucer / compyled and done
He prayenge the reders / this mater not deny
Newly correcked (sic) / in the cyte of London
In flete strete / at the sygne of the sonne
Inprinted by me / Wynkyn de worde
The .M.CCCCC. and .xvii. yere of our lorde.

Wynkyn de Worde's edition is extremely rare. There is a copy in the Cambridge University Library, and one in the Henry E. Huntington Library at San Gabriel, California.<sup>121</sup> A rotographic reproduction of the copy in the Huntington Library is deposited in the Library of Congress at Washington.<sup>122</sup>

After line 546 of Book I, Wynkyn de Worde's edition is a mere reprint of Caxton's, reproducing all the omissions, transpositions, and corruptions of  $Cx$ , and differing from it only in minor variations of spelling, and by the introduction of a few typographical errors. But, for the first 546 lines of the poem, W is entirely independent of Cx. For this portion of its text, W reproduces a lost manuscript of  $\alpha$  type, closer to H<sub>4</sub> than to H<sub>2</sub>Ph. Line 546 of Book I is the last line on fol. a 8 vo. of Caxton's edition, and is thus at the end of the first quire of eight leaves. It is clear that the copy of Cx which Wynkyn de Worde used had lost its first quire, and that this missing portion was supplied from a manuscript copy. For the first 546 lines, then, W is a valuable witness to the text of  $\alpha$ ; for the rest of the poem it has no significance.

PYNSON'S EDITION 1526. In 1526 Richard Pynson published a collection of Chaucer's works, printed in double columns, which includes Troilus, the Canterbury Tales, and certain of the minor poems.<sup>123</sup> It was issued in three parts, each with separate foliation, which could be bound together, or sold separately. The part containing Troilus has the title: "Here begynneth the boke of Troylus and Creseyde newly printed by a trewe cople." The colophon reads: "Here endeth the boke of Troylus and Creseyde / empreinted at London in Fletestrete by Rycharde Pynson / printer unto the kynges noble grace."

The "trewe cople" from which Pynson "newly printed" his text of Troilus was merely a copy of Caxton's edition, the omissions and transpositions of which are slavishly followed. The spelling is somewhat modernized; and there are occasional typographical errors.<sup>124</sup> Pynson's edition can, therefore, contribute nothing towards the establishment of Chaucer's text.

Troilus & Criseyde

1542 and about 1550, the text of Troilus fills fols. 170–218 and part of fol. 219 a. Judged by sixteenth-century standards, and even by those of a later date, Thynne's text of the poem merits high praise. It is remarkably free from careless blunders, and preserves in a majority of the lines the integrity of Chaucer's metre. It is easily the best edition of the poem published before the nineteenth century. Unlike the prints of Caxton, Wynkyn de Worde, and Pynson, it is really edited, being based on a collation of several authorities.

These authorities were at least three: (1) Caxton's edition; (2) a  $\gamma$  manuscript closely akin to CpH1S2; (3) a manuscript which was of the  $\alpha$  type, at least in Books I and II.

The use made of these authorities is not the same throughout the poem. In Book I, where  $\gamma$  presents the revised  $\beta$  text, Thynne found Cx and his  $\gamma$  manuscript in substantial agreement. He gave, particularly in the early part of the book, precedence to Cx, though avoiding the glaring corruptions of this authority. In Book I, Th shares very few of the distinctive  $\gamma$  readings. It contains, however, a considerable number of  $\alpha$  readings, the most important of which is the inclusion of stanza 128, otherwise found only in H2PhH4. In Book II, the proportion of distinctive  $\gamma$  readings is much greater, and the influence of Cx is much less. In the first 800 lines are found a few  $\alpha$  readings; but after line 800, Thynne seems to have consulted his  $\alpha$  authority little, if at all.<sup>126</sup> In Books III–V, the text of Th is to all intents and purposes consistently of the  $\gamma$  type, save that it avoids the confusion of  $\gamma$  as to the proem of Book IV,<sup>127</sup> and contains stanza 102 of Book IV, which is omitted by  $\gamma$ . There are in these books no instances where an  $\alpha$  reading has been adopted; and only rarely does one discover any trace of Cx. Th consistently avoids the distinctive  $\beta$  readings, regularly given by Cx, which are so numerous in Book III.

Despite its general excellence, the text of Th is but of slight service towards establishing a critical text. Since we possess such generous manuscript attestation for the readings of  $\gamma$ , there is little occasion to consult Th, save for its  $\alpha$  readings in Book I and Book II, and then only when the  $\alpha$  authorities are at variance. Even in these cases, the "edited" character of Th forces us to accept its readings with caution.

STOW'S EDITION 1561. In the edition of Chaucer's works "Imprinted at London, by Ihon Kyngston, for Ihon Wight, dwellyng in Poules Churchyarde. Anno 1561," which is usually referred to as Stow's edition, Troilus is found on fols. 151 b—194 a. The text is a mere reprint of Th, with some modernization of spelling and consequent derangement of metre, and with occasional errors of printing.

SPEGHT'S EDITIONS OF 1598 and 1602. In Speght's edition of 1598, the text of Troilus is merely an inaccurate reprint of that found in Stow's edition. Even the pagination is the same. In Speght 1598, as in Stow, it extends from fol. 151 b to fol. 194 a.<sup>128</sup>

In Speght's edition of 1602, Troilus is found on fols. 143 a—182 a. Its text of the poem varies considerably from that of the 1598 edition in minor matters of phrasing. Occasionally a printer's error of the former edition is corrected. Much more frequently, the variation is the result of editorial "improving" of the text, apparently with the idea of conforming it to the editor's notion of Chaucer's metre. I have found no evidence to suggest that the editor consulted any manuscript copies of the poem. The result is a text much more corrupt than that of its predecessors. With all its corruptions, this edition became the standard text of the poem for more than a century. It was reprinted in 1687.

SIR FRANCIS KINASTON 1635. In 1635, Sir Francis Kinaston <sup>129</sup> published a small quarto of 26 + 105 + 6 + 159 pages, the title of which reads: "Amorum / Troili / et / Creseidae / Libri duo priores / Anglico-Latini. / Oxoniae, / Excudebat Iobannes Lichfield, / Anno Domini / 1635." <sup>130</sup>

The volume contains on the left-hand pages a translation into accentual Latin verse, which retains the metre and rhyme-scheme of the seven-line stanza, of the first two books of Troilus. The translation is faithful, and not without literary quality; as an exercise in literary ingenuity it deserves high praise. On the right-hand pages, Kinaston reprinted in black-letter type the original text of Books I and II. This text is a reprint, with many new errors, of the text of Speght's edition of 1602.

It was Kinaston's desire, he tells us, to rescue the genius of Chaucer from the medium of an obsolete speech, to render him "per omnia secula (quantum in nobis est) stabilem et immotum," and to make him known beyond the limits of this too narrow island. If these two books are well received, he promises to publish the remaining books, together with a commentary on the whole poem. The promise of further publication was not carried out; but Kinaston completed both translation and commentary. His completed manuscript was preserved, and came into the hands of F. G. Waldron of Drury Lane Theatre, who in 1795 proposed to publish it, with additional notes of his own. In the following year, Waldron actually issued a thin volume of xxxii + 12 pages with the title: "The Loves of Troilus and Creseid, written by Chaucer; with a Commentary, By Sir Francis Kinaston: Never Before Published. London, Printed for and Sold by F. G. Waldron, . . . M.DCCXCVI." This misleading title introduces a rambling introduction of 32 pages, the English text of the first twelve stanzas of the poem, and Kinaston's notes on these stanzas (with additions by Waldron). No further portion of the work was ever published; and the present location of the manuscript is not known.<sup>131</sup> The annotations printed, though not lacking in intelligence, are not significant enough to make one regret the loss.

URRY'S EDITION 1721. In Urry's edition of Chaucer's works, Troilus fills pages 269-333. Urry's text of the poem, which represents the high-water mark of corruption, is, none the less, the first since Thynne's which is based on the collation of several authorities. Besides the earlier prints, Urry consulted three manuscript copies of the poem: H3 (Urry's No. II), Gg (Urry's No. XI), and Ph ("MS. Sp").<sup>132</sup> His method was to reproduce the text of Thynne or of Speght, with frequent "corrections" from his other authorities, or, when these failed him, by the free insertion or omission of words not essential to the meaning. His sole criterion was his belief that "Chaucer's Verses originally consisted of an equal number of Feet."<sup>133</sup> To achieve this metrical equality, he constantly adds inflectional syllables, such as -en, in total ignorance of the true forms of Chaucer's English.

Urry's text of Troilus is reproduced in John Bell's edition of Chaucer's works 1782 (Vol. 8), and in Anderson's edition of 1793-5; but Chalmers (1810) goes back to the "blackletter editions, which, with all their faults, are more to be depended on than Urry's." <sup>134</sup> The Chiswick edition of 1822 and Moxon's edition of 1843 follow the same practice as Chalmers. <sup>135</sup>

ROBERT BELL'S EDITION 1854-6. In Bell's edition of the Poetical Works of Geoffrey Chaucer, the text of Troilus fills volume 5. Bell was the first editor since Thynne to base his text primarily on the manuscripts; but his choice of authorities was an unfortunate one. He used H<sub>2</sub>, H<sub>3</sub>, and H<sub>1</sub>. Up to 4. 196, at which point the first hand of H<sub>2</sub> stops, Bell based his text on H<sub>2</sub>, with corrections from H<sub>3</sub>; after 4. 196, the text follows H<sub>1</sub>. It is curious that Bell should have preferred H<sub>2</sub>, with its manifold corruptions, to the relatively pure  $\gamma$  text of H<sub>1</sub>. Throughout the poem, Bell adopted readings from Speght's edition whenever they seemed to him "better" than those of his manuscripts, duly recording the fact in his foot-notes. He has, however, silently modified the spelling of his authorities. At the foot of the page are printed a few explanatory notes.

MORRIS'S EDITION 1866. In 1866 Richard Morris edited the Poetical Works of Geoffrey Chaucer in six volumes for a new issue of the Aldine Edition of the British Poets. Troilus fills volume 4 and the early pages of volume 5. In this edition, the poem is "for the first time, printed entirely from a single manuscript." <sup>136</sup> The single manuscript chosen was H<sub>1</sub>. With this, Morris collated H<sub>3</sub>, H<sub>4</sub>, H<sub>2</sub>, and A, the manuscripts available in the British Museum. His assurance that "All corrections of the original scribe . . . are printed in italics, so that the reader may see at a glance where the manuscript has been altered" <sup>137</sup> is not altogether borne out by the facts. Many minor "corrections" are made without this indication.

<sup>135</sup> In all of these editions, from John Bell to Moxon, the text of the Canterbury Tales is that of Tyrwhitt. It is to be regretted that this great scholar did not also edit the text of Troilus.

SKEAT'S EDITION 1894. In Skeat's Oxford Chaucer, the text of Troilus fills pages 153-417 of volume 2, with explanatory notes on pages 461-506.<sup>138</sup> The text is based on "a close collation of Cl and Cp, taking Cl as the foundation, but correcting it by Cp throughout. . . . In a few places, as shewn by the foot-notes, the readings of other MSS. have been preferred."<sup>139</sup> Though Skeat examined all the extant manuscripts,<sup>140</sup> he collated carefully only those which had then been printed by the Chaucer Society: H1, H2, and Gg. He also collated the edition of Thynne. He recognized "two main families" of manuscripts. "The larger family is that which resembles Cl, Cp, and H [H1]. Of the smaller Cm [Gg] may be taken as the type."<sup>141</sup> With such authorities to guide him, it was inevitable that Skeat should have printed a  $\gamma$  text of the poem. His authorities, outside of the  $\gamma$  group, are both so corrupt that it is not strange that he failed to discriminate between scribal corruptions and authentic variants. Moreover, the composite character of both H2 and Gg served further to conceal the true relations. Only between 3. 399 and 4. 196 do both these manuscripts give consistently  $\alpha$  readings, and, in this portion of the poem,  $\gamma$  also usually gives unrevised readings.

Skeat's text, then, is a print of  $\gamma$ , purged of its obvious errors by an eclectic adoption of readings from other authorities. Despite its deficiencies in critical method, it marks a great advance on all previous editions of the poem.

<sup>141</sup> Oxford Chaucer 5. lxxv. Skeat conjectured that in 4.750-6 the text of Gg "seems to represent the first draft of these lines, which were afterwards altered to the form in which they appear in the text, whilst at the same time the stanza was shifted down" (p. lxxi); but he never suspected the extent to which the poem had undergone revision.

Troilus & Criseyde

The debt of Chaucerian scholarship to Dr. Skeat is, and must always remain, a large one.

Skeat's text was adopted by F. S. Ellis in the Kelmscott Chaucer, printed in 1896 by William Morris.

GLOBE EDITION 1898. In the Globe Edition of the Works of Chaucer, published by Macmillan and Company under the general editorship of Alfred W. Pollard, the text of Troilus was edited by Professor (now Sir) William S. McCormick. It occupies pages 438–558. In this edition, for the first time, the text of the poem rests on a thorough examination of all the MSS.;<sup>142</sup> but, since the Globe edition was designed by the publishers as a "popular edition," it was necessary to curtail to a minimum the bulk of critical apparatus. The "text is based upon J, and has been corrected throughout from readings of  $\alpha$  and  $\beta$  types alone. But all the authorities have been examined, and all the important variations of  $\gamma$  type are given."<sup>143</sup> Since J is a composite authority, which gives a  $\beta$  text up to line 430 of Book IV, and thereafter an  $\alpha$  text to the end of the poem, its choice as basal authority has had as result the printing of what is predominantly a  $\beta$  text for the first two-thirds of the poem, and of what is predominantly an  $\alpha$  text for the remainder.

Textual Criticism<sup>144</sup>

The problem of constituting a critical text of Chaucer's Troilus is complicated by the fact that the existing authori-

<sup>142</sup> With the editor's analysis of the manuscript relations, as briefly summarized on pp. xli-xlii of the Introduction, my own conclusions are in certain respects at variance. McCormick regarded  $\gamma$  as representing a stage of revision later than that of  $\beta$ , "a later copy, either carelessly corrected by the author, or collated by some hand after Chaucer's death."

<sup>144</sup> For an exhaustive study of the text and of the interrelations of the manuscripts, the reader is referred to the present writer's Chaucer Society volume, The Textual Tradition of Chaucer's Troilus. In the following pages, the conclusions of that study are restated; but it has not seemed necessary to repeat the evidence which supports the conclusions, since the publications of the Chaucer Society are accessible to all scholars.

The Text

ties present the poem in more than a single state. The editor is therefore confronted, not only with variations of reading due to scribal blundering or conscious "editing," but with other variations, some of them widely divergent, which are due to authentic revision by the poet himself.

That the poem has undergone extensive revision of a deliberate sort is clear beyond any doubt. That the reviser was the poet himself is equally clear; for the revisions, which involve the writing of new passages and the rephrasing of many individual lines, are done by a poet who understood perfectly the principles of Chaucer's metre and grammar, and who knew how to catch what we recognize as his characteristic manner.

In Book I, the earlier, "alpha" version, represented by H<sub>2</sub>PhH<sub>4</sub>, contains a stanza, number 128, which is obviously genuine, but which is not necessary to the sense. This stanza is omitted in the "beta" version.<sup>145</sup>

In Book III, two stanzas, numbers 201 and 202 of this edition, have been moved in the  $\beta$  text from a position immediately after line 1323, where they are found in  $\alpha$ , to a position immediately before line 1415. The deliberate intention of this shift is shown by the fact that lines 1323, 1415, and the first line of the shifted passage, have been altered to suit the new relations.<sup>146</sup> There is also evidence that the song sung by Troilus in praise of Love (3. 1744-71), omitted by H<sub>2</sub>Ph, was not present in the earliest draft of the poem.<sup>147</sup>

In Book IV, the long soliloquy of Troilus on God's foreknowledge and man's freedom of choice (lines 953-1085) is not present in the  $\alpha$  version of the poem.<sup>148</sup> In the earliest state of the text, represented by H<sub>3</sub>Ph and by H<sub>4</sub>, the entire passage is lacking. Before two of the  $\alpha$  MSS., Gg and

J, were derived, however, the last stanza (lines 1079-85) had been added, and lines 950-2 had been revised to suit the new context.<sup>149</sup>

Still another instance of revision in Book IV is the shift of stanza 108, which in the  $\alpha$  text follows line 735. In  $\beta$ , this stanza has been moved to a position immediately before line 757.<sup>150</sup>

In the earliest version of Book V, the three stanzas (lines 1807-27) translated from Boccaccio's Teseide, which follow heavenward the soul of the slain Troilus, were not present.<sup>151</sup>

Besides these more striking instances of revision, there are many individual lines in which the phrasing of the  $\alpha$  text has been modified. In a number of cases, the revision results in a somewhat freer rendering of the Italian source.<sup>152</sup> These revisions of individual lines, which are all recorded in the variant readings of this edition, are not distributed evenly through the poem. They are in large part concentrated in 1. 1-500, 2. 701-1113, and 3. 401-4. 1450. It

<sup>151</sup> They are omitted by Ph and by H2H4; but in Ph they are inserted by the original scribe on an inset leaf. They are, however, present in J, and were probably present in the mutilated Gg—MSS, which derive from the second stage of  $\alpha$ . See Textual Tradition, pp. 245-8.

The Text

would seem that for some reason these portions of the poem received special attention.

What was Chaucer's motive in this extensive revision of his text one cannot say with certainty. The addition of the soliloquy on free choice, and of the stanzas from Teseide, enhance appreciably the serious and philosophic tone with which the poet has overcast his story. Presumably that was the effect he desired to attain. But in the other revisions no consistent tendency is discoverable. They have no bearing on plot, character, or interpretation. They are changes in words, or in arrangement of matter, rather than in ideas. In four passages (1. 9; 1. 164; 4. 300; 4. 644), the revision is in the direction of heightening the classical coloring of the poem. In 2. 115, on the other hand, the revision is in the opposite direction. Chaucer's motive seems generally to have been merely the artist's desire to improve his artistry. Sometimes the revision secures greater definiteness, or removes an awkward phrase.<sup>153</sup> More often the change seems to be merely capricious.

From all this it follows that the editor of a critical text must determine which variations of reading are merely scribal, and which are the result of authentic revision. Having purged the text of scribal corruption, he must next in many passages proceed to establish two authentic readings—one original, the other revised.<sup>154</sup> Though the problem is complicated enough, there is fortunately sufficient evidence to admit of its solution in the vast majority of cases. Considering the length of the poem, there are very few lines in which the true reading (or readings) is in serious doubt.

One MS. only, Ph, presents consistently an  $\alpha$  text throughout the poem; and only R and Cx give  $\beta$  readings throughout. Unluckily these authorities are among the least reliable; they are so seriously marred by corruptions that no editor could think of choosing any of them as the basis of his text. Of the remaining authorities, some are composite, i.e. derived in part from an  $\alpha$  exemplar and in part from a  $\beta$  exemplar (e.g., J presents a  $\beta$ -text through line 430 of Book IV, and an  $\alpha$  text from that point to the end of the poem); others are derived from Chaucer's original at a time when the process of revision was not yet completed, and so present in certain parts of the poem  $\beta$  readings, in other parts  $\alpha$  readings.

<sup>154</sup> In a very few instances, it is possible to identify an intermediate reading which seems to be authentic.

In this last category belongs a group of MSS., including several of very careful and beautiful execution and of early date, which are certainly derived from a lost common original, derived in its turn from Chaucer's own copy, at a time when the more important revisions had been made, but before the poet had revised certain portions of his work. This group, designated as "gamma," is made up of seven MSS.: Cp, Cl, H1, A, D, S2, Dig. Gamma readings are also found in the "mixed" or "contaminated" texts of S1 (particularly before 2. 617), of H3 (particularly between 2. 1033 and 3. 1095), and of the edition of Thynne. That the MSS. enumerated above are descended from a lost common original is shown by their agreement in a series of erroneous readings. They omit stanza 102 of Book IV, a stanza necessary to the sense of the context; they treat the proem of Book IV as though it were the conclusion of Book III; they share in a long list of variant readings of which a considerable number are clear cases of error, others obviously inferior, and the rest, with very few exceptions, variations of the trivial sort which normally originate with a scribe.

Within the group, certain nearer relationships are clearly discernible. S2 and Dig are late and corrupt copies of a lost  $\gamma$  MS., which was itself full of glaring corruptions. A and D share a long series of errors which show that they are derived from a lost  $\gamma$  MS, whose text, though much purer than that of the S2Dig original, is less reliable than that of Cp, Cl, or H1. The three MSS. just named are beautifully and carefully executed. From them alone it is usually possible to determine the reading of the  $\gamma$  original. In doubtful cases the testimony of AD is generally decisive. It is seldom necessary to consider the corrupt text of S2Dig.

The  $\gamma$  original must have been written at an early date; for of the MSS. derived from it Cp is in an early fifteenth-century hand, and Cl, which has on the lower margin of its beautifully illuminated first page the arms of Henry V as Prince of Wales, must have been executed between 1399 and 1413. But early though it is, there is no reason to believe that it ever passed under the poet's correcting eye. Its errors, particularly that which concerns the proem of Book IV, are of a sort which he could hardly have failed to emend. Its authority, then, is that of an early, and in the main very pure, copy of the poem, but not that which would attach to a MS. which had undergone Chaucer's personal "rubbing and scraping."

It was derived from Chaucer's own copy at a time when the poet's revision of his work was not yet complete. In Books I and IV, it gives usually revised,  $\beta$ , readings; in Book II, its readings are apparently those of the final revision, though for lines 701-1113 the evidence is confused;<sup>155</sup> in Book III, it gives in the main unrevised,  $\alpha$ , readings.

I have already said that only one MS., Ph, gives consistently an  $\alpha$  text throughout the poem. But fortunately there is no portion of the text in which it is the sole authority for  $\alpha$ . Several other MSS. give an  $\alpha$  text through long portions of the poem. These MSS. are of composite character, derived in certain parts from an  $\alpha$  exemplar, in other parts from a  $\beta$  exemplar. Often we can determine within a few lines at what point a scribe ceased to copy one exemplar, and turned to another. Up to 3. 1078, excepting 1. 1-70 and 1. 498-567,<sup>156</sup> the readings of Ph can be checked by those of H<sub>2</sub>, which in this portion of its text is written by the same scribe who executed Ph, and copied by him from the same  $\alpha$  exemplar. From the beginning of the poem through 2. 65, H<sub>4</sub> also gives an  $\alpha$  text; and for the first 546 lines of Book I we have also the independent evidence of W. From 2. 64 to 2. 1210 and from 3. 399 to the end, Gg and the closely related H<sub>5</sub> give an  $\alpha$  text.<sup>157</sup> After 4. 299, H<sub>3</sub> becomes an  $\alpha$  MS.; and at 4. 438, J also changes from  $\beta$  to  $\alpha$ . From 1.1 to 2. 800 Th occasionally presents  $\alpha$  readings, notably in stanza 128 of Book I.

<sup>156</sup> In these two passages written by Hand 3, H2 gives an  $\alpha$  text closely related to that of H4.

Troilus & Criseyde

It may be convenient to list in tabular form the authorities which attest the  $\alpha$  text:

1. 1	— 1. 546	H <sub>2</sub> PhH <sub>4</sub> W
1. 547	— 2. 65	H <sub>2</sub> PhH <sub>4</sub>
2. 66	— 2. 1210	H <sub>2</sub> PhGgH <sub>5</sub>
2. 1211	— 3. 398	H <sub>2</sub> Ph
3. 399	— 4. 196	H <sub>2</sub> PhGgH <sub>5</sub>
4. 197	— 4. 299	GgH <sub>5</sub> Ph
4. 300	— 4. 430	GgH <sub>5</sub> H <sub>3</sub> Ph
4. 431	— 4. 686	JGgH <sub>5</sub> H <sub>3</sub> Ph
4. 687	— end	JGgH <sub>3</sub> Ph

These authorities, though associated by the fact that they present the unrevised text, do not, like the  $\gamma$  MSS., show any evidence of a genealogical relation. Between H<sub>2</sub> and Ph, and between Gg and H<sub>5</sub>, there is close relationship. Each of these pairs of MSS. agrees in a long list of corrupt readings which clearly prove descent from a lost common original. But this is not true of the group as a whole. H<sub>2</sub>Ph, H<sub>4</sub>, W, GgH<sub>5</sub>, J, and H<sub>3</sub> are derived through independent channels from Chaucer's own copy of the poem. In the few trivial instances in which they agree in readings which cannot be attributed to the poet himself, we must regard the corruption as a blunder of Chaucer's own scribe, which had failed to catch the poet's proof-reading eye.<sup>158</sup>

This original, then, was not written by Chaucer's own hand, but by the "Adam, scriveyn" to whom is addressed the well-known poetical rebuke. A study of the existing MSS. enables us to determine with a high degree of probability something of the methods of Chaucer's literary craftsmanship.<sup>159</sup> The poet's own draft of his poem, confused, it would seem, on many a page by erasures and interlineations, was turned over to a professional scribe, who made from it a fair copy. This copy contained not only the errors which are inevitable in the work of transcription, but others which arose from Adam's failure to understand here and there his employer's final intention, obscured as it was by a tangle of rewritings and blotted lines. When the poet had "proof-read" this copy, correcting all of Adam's errors which caught his attention, it became what we may call his own "official" text, from which new copies were made for presentation to friends and patrons. In this official text, the poet also made from time to time other alterations dictated by his own exacting poetic instinct—the addition of new passages, the rearrangement of other passages, the new turning of a phrase, the substitution of what seemed to him a happier word, the metrical revision of a halting line. These revisions were not made systematically from the beginning of the poem to the end. The revisions of Book III were made later than those of Book IV.<sup>160</sup> Except at the very end, Book V seems to have undergone hardly any revision after the time when the  $\alpha$  MSS. were derived. In Book II, the important revisions are confined to a passage beginning with line 701 and ending with line 1113, and in this passage, it would seem, there were two separate and conflicting revisions.

The  $\alpha$  MSS. are derived, then, from a single authentic MS. in Chaucer's own possession, but a MS. whose text was undergoing progressive modifications. Earliest in derivation would seem to be the  $\alpha$  portion of the text of H<sub>3</sub>. Like Ph, it omits the soliloquy on free choice entire; it contains the Teseide stanzas at the end of Book V, but the text of this passage indicates that it was derived from the  $\gamma$  authority which has contributed elsewhere to the "mixed" text of H<sub>3</sub>; between lines 1301 and 1442 of Book IV it presents a series of unique, but apparently authentic, readings which seem to represent the text in a stage more primitive than that of any other authority. Next in order of derivation is the original of H<sub>2</sub>Ph, which knows nothing of the free-choice soliloquy nor of the Teseide stanzas, and which omits the hymn to Love in 3. 1744-71.<sup>161</sup> After H<sub>3</sub> and H<sub>2</sub>Ph were derived the originals of GgH<sub>5</sub> and J. Gg contains the last stanza only of the soliloquy;<sup>162</sup> J contains the whole of the soliloquy, but there is clear evidence that it is derived from an exemplar which originally had only the last stanza.<sup>163</sup> J, and probably also Gg,<sup>164</sup> contains the Teseide stanzas.

After these MSS. were derived from it, the original copy was subjected to a series of revisions which affect many lines of Books I, II, and IV. It was after these revisions had been made that the  $\gamma$  original was written out. Subsequent to the derivation of  $\gamma$ , Book III underwent a thorough revision.

The Text

The final,  $\beta$  version of the text is presented consistently by R, and by the edition of Caxton. Unluckily both these authorities are highly unreliable, so that neither of them can serve as basis for a critical text. Fortunately, however, there are other and better authorities by which the text of  $\beta$  can be constituted. Up to line 430 of Book IV the very accurately, carefully written J is a  $\beta$  authority of prime importance. After line 65 of Book II, H<sub>4</sub>, though occasionally contaminated from an  $\alpha$  source, is an important witness to  $\beta$ ; and after 4. 196 its readings can be checked by the closely related text of H<sub>2</sub>. For the passages 1. 1—2. 63 and 2. 1211—3. 398 GgH<sub>5</sub> give a  $\beta$  text. Until 4.299 H<sub>3</sub> gives a  $\beta$  text frequently contaminated from a  $\gamma$  source; and S<sub>1</sub>, though strongly contaminated by  $\gamma$  readings, is often useful as confirmatory evidence. It must be remembered also that  $\gamma$  was derived after most of the revisions, except those of Book III, had been completed, and that thus the text of  $\gamma$  is in the main a  $\beta$  authority.

The attestation of the  $\beta$  text, apart from the witness of  $\gamma$ , may be presented in the following table:

1. 1	— 2. 65	JGgH <sub>5</sub> H <sub>3</sub> RCx
2. 66	— 2. 1033	JRH <sub>4</sub> (H <sub>3</sub> )Cx
2. 1034	— 2. 1210	JRH <sub>4</sub> Cx
2. 1211	— 3. 398	JRH <sub>4</sub> GgH <sub>5</sub> (H <sub>3</sub> )Cx
3. 399	— 3. 1095	JRH <sub>4</sub> Cx
3. 1096	— 4. 196	JRH <sub>4</sub> (H <sub>3</sub> )Cx
4. 197	— 4. 299	JRH <sub>2</sub> H <sub>4</sub> (H <sub>3</sub> )Cx
4. 300	— 4. 430	JRH <sub>2</sub> H <sub>4</sub> Cx
4. 431	— end	H <sub>2</sub> H <sub>4</sub> RCx

The text of S<sub>1</sub> is so seriously contaminated that I have not included it in this table. Throughout this edition the reading of S<sub>1</sub> is separately recorded, and, after Book I, the same treatment is accorded to H<sub>3</sub>. Thus a  $\beta$  reading in which S<sub>1</sub> participates is entered in the variants as " $\beta$ S<sub>1</sub>," and, after

Troilus & Criseyde

Book I, a reading in which H<sub>3</sub> participates is entered as " $\beta$ H<sub>3</sub>."

There is no evidence which establishes a genealogical relationship of these  $\beta$  authorities. Within the group, there is clear evidence of such relationship between Gg and H<sub>5</sub>, and between H<sub>2</sub> and H<sub>4</sub>. With these exceptions, the  $\beta$  authorities seem to be derived along independent lines from Chaucer's official copy of the revised text. Though the evidence is not clear, there is some ground for believing that H<sub>2</sub>H<sub>4</sub>RCx derive from an alternative copy of the official text—a second fair copy made by "Adam scriveyn," into which had been incorporated the revisions, but which contained here and there an uncorrected slip of Adam's scribal pen.

A problem concerning the  $\beta$  text so baffling that I can offer no satisfactory solution is offered by a series of divergent readings found between lines 701 and 1131 of Book II. Within this passage are found over a score of variant readings, most of them of a striking sort, which point to deliberate and authentic revision. On the basis of these variations, the authorities divide sharply into three groups: H<sub>2</sub>PhGgH<sub>5</sub>,  $\gamma$ H<sub>3</sub>CxS<sub>1</sub>, and JRH<sub>4</sub>. The first of these groups presents, presumably, the  $\alpha$  text. We should expect that JRH<sub>4</sub> would give the final  $\beta$  text, with  $\gamma$  occupying a middle position.<sup>165</sup> In certain passages this is the case; but in others JRH<sub>4</sub> agree with H<sub>2</sub>PhGgH<sub>5</sub>, where  $\gamma$ H<sub>3</sub>CxS<sub>1</sub> present a revised reading. In some cases (lines 703, 721, 760-1, 813, 859, 1113), moreover, the reading of JRH<sub>4</sub> seems to be of scribal origin rather than an authentic revision.

<sup>165</sup> It is to be noted that, in these instances,  $\gamma$  has the support of H<sub>3</sub>CxS<sub>1</sub>. Of these authorities, S<sub>1</sub> ceases to be regularly a  $\gamma$  MS. after 2.617, and H<sub>3</sub> does not become a  $\gamma$  MS. until 2.1034. In no part of Cx is there evidence of contamination from a  $\gamma$  source. Through the whole passage, then,  $\gamma$  has the independent support of Cx, and (barring possible contamination) of S<sub>1</sub>, and up to line 1034 of H<sub>3</sub> as well. During this passage there are twenty-two distinctive  $\gamma$  readings (see Textual Tradition, pp. 86-8) of the sort found throughout the poem. In three of these S<sub>1</sub> participates; Cx shares in none.

The Text

The state of things just described may perhaps have arisen in some such way as this:—From Chaucer's official archetype were derived H<sub>2</sub>Ph and GgH<sub>5</sub>. Next, certain revisions were made in this archetype, which were duly incorporated into  $\gamma$  and into H<sub>3</sub>, Cx, and S<sub>1</sub>. Then an accident to the archetype MS. caused the destruction or loss of five or six leaves, containing stanzas 100–59, lines 694–1113. Their place was then supplied in the archetype by reference to a copy of the poem not otherwise represented by any existing MS., which had been derived later than H<sub>2</sub>Ph and GgH<sub>5</sub> (since it must have contained the revised reading in 734–5), but before the  $\gamma$ H<sub>3</sub>CxS<sub>1</sub> revisions were made. In this substituted copy new revisions were made in lines 731, 736–8, and perhaps also in 703 and 760–1; though in these two cases I suspect that we have rather scribal corruptions of the MS. from which the substituted leaves were copied. The text of JRH<sub>4</sub> is derived from these substituted leaves.

The explanation just given is pure hypothesis. All that can be said for it is that it explains the facts, and is not inherently improbable.<sup>166</sup> Fortunately this is the only portion of the text about which there is serious doubt.

The Text of this Edition

It is the purpose of this edition of Troilus to present, so far as the evidence will permit, a text of the poem, purged from scribal corruption, which shall incorporate all the revisions which represent the poet's final preference as to the reading of his work—such a text as might have received his own final sanction.

With this end in view, I have chosen as primary bases for my text two manuscripts, wholly unrelated by any genealogical tie, each of which is clearly derived along independent lines of descent from Chaucer's own archetype.

<sup>166</sup> For a fuller discussion of the problem, see Textual Tradition, pp. 125–8.

Troilus & Criseyde

These manuscripts are Cp and J. Each of these authorities presents a text remarkably free from scribal blunders, conscientious (though not impeccable) in its preservation of grammatical forms, and hence of Chaucer's metre, and strikingly in agreement, one with the other, in orthography.

Cp is a member of the important genealogical group designated as  $\gamma$ . By comparison with other  $\gamma$  MSS., particularly with the carefully executed Cl and H<sub>1</sub>, it is easy to purge Cp of all corruptions for which its own immediate scribe is responsible, and to bring its readings into accord with the lost  $\gamma$  original. Having purged its text of all idiosyncratic corruptions, the next step is to eliminate all the errors and "editings" which originate with the scribe who wrote the  $\gamma$  original. I have treated as of scribal origin all  $\gamma$  readings, even though logically and metrically possible or even acceptable, which are not confirmed by authorities independent of the  $\gamma$  group. This elimination of readings peculiar to  $\gamma$  is accomplished very easily by a substitution of the reading established on the basis of the remaining authorities, of which the most consistently reliable is J. In a majority of instances, it is sufficient to substitute for the reading peculiar to  $\gamma$  the reading found in J. I have found no instances of any significance in which  $\gamma$  and J concur in a reading not otherwise authenticated.

I have depended primarily on J, not only for the elimination of the scribal corruptions of  $\gamma$ , but also for the final revisions made subsequently to the derivation of  $\gamma$ , and hence not incorporated in its text. These revisions, unknown to the  $\gamma$  scribe, are most frequent in Book III. Here the corrected  $\gamma$  text is usually in accord with the evidence of the  $\alpha$  MSS. (H<sub>2</sub>PhGgH<sub>5</sub>), and the revised  $\beta$  text is presented by JRH<sub>4</sub>Cx, with the frequent accord of S<sub>1</sub> and of H<sub>3</sub>. Wherever J has the support of three independent  $\beta$  authorities, I have regarded its reading as an authentic revision, and have accordingly adopted it into the text.

It is unfortunate for the textual critic that J does not continue to give a  $\beta$  text to the end of the poem. It maintains throughout its high standards of accuracy, so that it is still available for the correction of the scribal vagaries of  $\gamma$ ; but between lines 430 and 438 of Book IV its character changes. From there until the end of the poem its text is derived from an  $\alpha$  source, and the critic is deprived of its witness to the  $\beta$  text. For the latter part of the poem, then, the authorities for  $\beta$  are  $H_2H_4$ , R, Cx, and, intermittently S1. But the defection of J is less serious because after line 400 of Book IV  $\gamma$  has incorporated nearly all of the authentic revisions. I have, indeed, been chary of accepting as authentic revisions readings of  $H_2H_4RCx$  which are not found in  $\gamma$ , unless they have also the support of S1; but wherever I have rejected such a reading, I have recorded the fact in the notes.

I have already called attention to the fact that in the portion of Book II which falls between lines 701 and 1131 are found a series of readings the character of which cannot be satisfactorily determined.<sup>167</sup> Though the problem remain unsolved, it is necessary that the editor of an edition decide at least on a procedure to be followed. The question was whether to print the text of  $JRH_4$ , or that of  $\gamma H_3CxS1$ , as representative of the poet's final version. After much consideration, I have decided to print the readings of  $\gamma H_3CxS1$ . The divergent readings of  $JRH_4$  are, of course, plainly indicated among the variants.

I have been very chary of adopting into the text conjectural emendations, even when a possible emendation could be taken from among the variant readings of the MSS. and early editions. Unless the MS. or edition offering such a tempting reading is in a position to speak with authority, the assumption must be that its reading, however plausible, is the happy guess of a scribal editor. In the rare cases when such a variant has been adopted, I have given my reasons for so doing in the notes. In other cases, I have been content to suggest the reading in the notes, without printing it in the text. Fortunately the authoritative attestation of Troilus is so complete, and the resultant text so free from difficulties, that there is but little temptation to resort to emendation. A well attested reading should be accepted as authentic, even though the variant reading of a single authority gives a smoother, perhaps a better, line. It is not to be supposed that Chaucer wrote only lines of mechanically regular metre, nor that he always succeeded in avoiding awkward constructions.

<sup>167</sup> See above, p. lxxx.

By the processes described above, it is possible to determine with a high degree of certainty the authentic text of Troilus so far as its essential content is concerned, to restore verbatim Chaucer's final version of his poem. There remains the problem of literatim, the determination of a satisfactory orthography. Here the critical processes already described are of small avail. In the absence of any generally accepted standard of orthography, a scribe felt no necessary obligation to conform his own spelling to that of his exemplar, nor even to follow consistently any system of his own. It is not uncommon, even in a carefully executed MS., to find the same word differently spelled within the space of two or three lines.

What may have been Chaucer's own habits of spelling we have no means of determining. No scrap of his own handwriting has survived, nor any MS. of any of his writings which we can believe that he ever saw with his own eyes. By no amount of pains can we hope to present a text spelled precisely as Chaucer wrote it. Our ambition must be confined to the attainment of an orthography which the poet and his contemporaries would have regarded as not abnormal, an orthography which above all else does not "mismetre" Chaucer's text. The modern reader, used as he is to a rigorously enforced standard of spelling, is tempted to seek a normalized spelling for a Middle English text; but among all the uncertainties this at least is certain, that in Chaucer's day no such complete standardization existed. I have preferred to set before the modern reader a text spelled according to the practice of Chaucer's time, and the only practicable way of doing this is to accept the spelling of an early scribe.

Cp was written early in the fifteenth century; J is little if any later. Both MSS. are spelled with more consistency than most; and, what is more striking, they are spelled very much alike. Often for a whole stanza together they differ hardly at all. One is inclined to believe that each has preserved in general the orthographical character of Chaucer's "official" copy. Two other  $\gamma$  MSS., Cl and H1, follow in the main the same general practice, a fact which suggests that all three have kept something of the spelling of the lost  $\gamma$  original. It may be, however, that the orthographical similarity of these four MSS. results from the adherence of their scribes to an approximate standard established by an early fifteenth-century school of copyists. If that be the case, a modern edition may well adhere to the same practice.

I have reproduced ordinarily, therefore, the orthography of Cp; or perhaps I had better say the orthography of Cp and J conjointly. Where Cp and J are at variance, I have usually followed Cp; but I have freely substituted the spelling of J where a spelling of Cp obscures the metre, or seems otherwise to be a needless vagary.<sup>168</sup> These substitutions are made silently. To have recorded in the variants every such minor substitution could serve no useful purpose. When, however, I have rejected the spelling both of Cp and J, the fact is duly noted. The reader may be assured <sup>168</sup> I have consistently followed J in writing yit instead of yet, the form found in Cp; since, throughout Chaucer's verse, the word rhymes only with words containing short i (see Wild, pp. 82, 83). I have also preferred the form or, found in J, to the er normally given by Cp for the conjunction meaning ante. That the form er of Cp is a scribal substitution is suggested by the fact that in 3.377; 3.613; 5.1334 Cp reads er for or (= aut). Cl makes the same error in 4.834; 5.1400. Cp reads or (= ante) in 1.1071; 4.1685.

that, unless advertised to the contrary, he has before him the spelling either of Cp or of J. If it should concern him to know which of these authorities has been followed in any instance, he can easily answer the question by reference to the Chaucer Society's volume, A Parallel Text of Three More MSS. of Chaucer's Troilus, where the texts of J and of Cp are printed literatim in adjoining columns.

I have rarely had occasion to reject the spellings of both Cp and J; but I have done so whenever metrical considerations have made it necessary. This has been the case when the suppression, or meaningless intrusion, of a weak e has affected the syllabic value of a word.<sup>169</sup> In such cases I have been guided by considerations of historical grammar, and by the readings of the other authorities, particularly Cl and H1. The substituted spelling is usually that of Cl or H1, and the departure from CpJ is always recorded.

Though following the spelling of the authorities scrupulously in all essentials, I have not attempted to suggest the form of the MS. writing. Abbreviations (which are used only sparingly by Cp and J) are expanded, without the use of italics to indicate the fact of abbreviation. An ordinary capital F is printed for the initial ff of the MSS. In Cp, the character "yogh" (ȝ) is regularly written for the palatal continuant, where J writes y, and occasionally at the end of a word as an abbreviation for -es. Cp does not use the character "thorn" (þ) at all; in J it is used only in writing the word that (pronoun and conjunction). Both MSS. write gh for the velar continuant.<sup>170</sup> I have had no occasion, therefore, to use either of these obsolete characters in my text. In the case of u and v, I have followed modern usage, representing the consonantal sound by v, and the vocalic

<sup>169</sup> I have followed Cp in writing hire for the personal pronoun (fem. sing., gen. and acc., and 3d plu. gen.), though the word is always a monosyllable in metrical value. The final e is, of course, historically justified.

<sup>170</sup> Very rarely Cp writes ȝ for the velar continuant. In these cases I have printed the normal gh.

The Text

by u. The MSS., of course, use v initially, and u medially and finally, for both phonetic values without distinction. I have similarly printed the modern character j, instead of the i or I of the MSS., wherever the consonantal sound (dʒ) is intended. I cannot see that any useful purpose would be served by following the older usage in these particulars. The specialist does not need to be reminded of this usage; for the more general reader its preservation would but add an accidental detail to the substantial barriers which linguistic change has inevitably erected between him and one of the great literary masterpieces of the English tongue. We have long since abandoned the notion, current in the seventeenth century, that the text of Chaucer should be printed in black-letter type.

The punctuation has been supplied throughout the text in accordance with modern practice. The text of Cp is not pointed at all; that of J makes sparing use of the cross line (/) to indicate logical pauses, but only in the interior of a verse.<sup>171</sup>

It has been my purpose to record among the variants at the foot of the page every reading which could, in my judgment, be of possible significance to the student of the poem. A complete list of variant readings is given only in the cases where the constitution of the text or its interpretation is in doubt. In such cases the reader should have before him all the evidence, so that he may make his own text, if he is not satisfied with mine. Except in such cases, no useful purpose would be served by encumbering the page with the careless or stupid aberrations of some poor scribe, whose sins may well be forgotten, as well as forgiven.

I have not ordinarily recorded variant spellings. To have done so with any fullness would have added enormously to the bulk of variant readings. Important as some of these spellings may be for the investigation of dialect, they concern rather the student of fifteenth-century English than the student of Chaucer; for they indicate the linguistic habits of the various scribes rather than those of the poet himself. The characteristics of Chaucer's own speech must be determined by a study of his metre and rhyme, and by comparison with documents actually written down in London during the later decades of the fourteenth century. Thanks to the work of Kittredge, Ten Brink, Wild, and others, this evidence has been so thoroughly studied that we are able to say that a given form found in the fifteenth-century MSS. is, or is not, in accord with Chaucer's linguistic usage, that a given MS., such as Cp or J, has preserved in the main the characteristics of the poet's speech. For the student who may be concerned with the dialectal peculiarities of the various MSS. of Chaucer, the literatim transcripts published by the Chaucer Society furnish abundant material. In the case of Troilus, seven MSS. have been printed entire, and copious extracts have been printed from the rest.

<sup>171</sup> H4, R, and S1 make a more extensive use of the cross line.

Troilus & Criseyde

I have not thought it necessary to record the variants which are significant only in so far as they establish the common descent of two or more authorities from a lost common original—the blunders which serve to link together H2 and Ph, Gg and H5, A and D, S2 and Dig, H4 and the later portion of H2. Such variants are listed abundantly in my Chaucer Society volume, The Textual Tradition of Chaucer's Troilus. I have, however, recorded all the aberrant variants of the lost  $\gamma$  original. They are not, in proportion to the length of the poem, very numerous. Some of them, while not authoritative, are interesting instances of scribal "editing." In every case they serve as notice to the reader that I have rejected a reading of one of my basal authorities—Cp. There is further reason for recording them in the fact that a large number of them were adopted by Skeat.

I have recorded with absolute completeness every clearly attested reading of the  $\alpha$  text, and every reading, not clearly attested, which may have been a reading of the  $\alpha$  text. I have also recorded every reading found in two or more independent  $\beta$  authorities which may possibly point to an authentic revision not sufficiently attested for adoption into the text.

Beyond the limits of these categories, the variants recorded have been selected—because they seemed to me to possess some possible interest or significance—from among the thousands of variants which I have collected in an exhaustive study of the documents.

When among the variants a reading is recorded as found in two or more authorities, it is spelled, unless otherwise noted, according to the authority first cited. A reading attributed to  $\gamma$  is similarly given in the spelling of Cp. A reading attributed to  $\alpha$  is given in the spelling of that one of the authorities which present an  $\alpha$  text for the portion of the poem in question which stands first in the following list: J, H<sub>2</sub>, Gg, H<sub>3</sub>, Ph. In consulting the variant readings, one must remember that, whereas the symbol  $\gamma$  represents merely a lost copy of Chaucer's original, from which have been derived certain of the existing manuscripts—a copy which presumably had never passed under the poet's eye—the symbols  $\alpha$  and  $\beta$  represent Chaucer's own "official" copy of the poem in two different stages of authentic revision.

How often falleth al the effect contraire
Of surquidrie, and foule presumpcioun;
For kaught is proud, and kaught is debonaire.
This Troilus is clomben on the staire, 215
And litel weneth that he moot descenden;
But al day faileth thing that fooles wenden.

As proude Bayard gynneth for to skippe
Out of the wey, so pryketh hym his corn,
Til he a lasshe have of the longe whippe, 220
Than thynketh he, "though I prauunce al byforn,
First in the trays, ful fat, and newe shorn,
Yit am I but an hors, and horses lawe
I moot endure, and with my feres drawe."

So ferde it by this fierse and proude knyght; 225
Though he a worthy kynges sone were,
And wende no thing hadde had swich myght,
Ayeyns his wil, that sholde his herte stere,
Yit with a look his herte wax a-ferre,
That he, that now was moost in pride above, 230

In sorwe aboven alle sorwes smerte,
With feloun look and face dispitous.
Tho sodeynly down from his hors he sterte, 200
And thorough his paleis, with a swollen herte,
To chaumbre he wente; of nothyng took he hede,
Ne non to hym dar speke a word for drede.

NOTES TO BOOK ONE

NOTES TO BOOK ONE

1. The opening line of the poem contains a descriptive title. With this line, and with 1.54-5, in mind, the scribe of S1 supplies a colophon: "Here endeth the book of Troylus of double sorowe in loving of Cri. . . ."

2. "That was the son of King Priam of Troy."

4. Chaucer's poem, with its double change of fortune, is, in the medieval sense of the terms, first a comedy and then a tragedy. Dante, Epist. 10.10, says: "Comoedia vero inchoat asperitatem alicuius rei, sed eius materia prospere terminatur." Tragedy, on the other hand, "in principio est admirabilis et quieta, in fine sive exitu est foetida et horribilis." For Chaucer's definition of Tragedy, see Monk's Tale, B 3163-7. Compare also Chaucer's Boethius, 2. pr 2. 51-2: "Tragedie is to seyn, a ditee of a prosperitee for a tyme, that endeth in wrecchednesse." At 5.1786, Chaucer calls his poem a tragedy.

5. "Before I depart from you." The rhyme Troye: fro ye shows that ye is not the nominative (with long vowel), but the unemphatic form of the accusative yow (with the indefinite vowel). Skeat cites Two Gentlemen of Verona 4.1.3.

6-9. Chaucer invokes Tisiphone, one of the Furies, to help him write his sorrowful story. In Thebais 1.56-9 Oedipus prays:

Di, sontes animas, angustaque Tartara poenis
Qui regitis, tuque umbrifero Styx livida fundo,
Quam video, multumque mihi consueta vocari
Annue, Tisiphone, perversaque vota secunda.

In Thebais 1.88 Tisiphone is addressed as "crudelis Diva." Compare Roman de Thèbes 510: "Tesiphoné, fure d'enfer." See note to 4.22-4.

7. "These woful verses, which weep as I write them." Compare Fil. 1.6:

Ciò che dirà 'l mio verso lagrimoso.

13. Feere, companion, i.e. Tisiphone.

15-18. Compare Fame 615-40.

Troilus & Criseyde

16. Ne dar, dare not.

21. From Fil. 1.5:

Tuo sia l'onore, e mio si sia l'affanno.

Compare 1.1042-3.

24-28. Note a reading recorded in variants. The variation is so considerable as to point clearly to authentic revision. Some of the steps of the revision can be traced. Line 24 in a is hypermetrical. In the original, olde had apparently been revised to read passid; but in H2 (Hand 3) and Ph both adjectives are retained. H4 omits passid. Similarly in 26, an original somtyme had been corrected to that. H4 again gives the original reading, while H2Ph are conflate. Note also the conflate reading of H5 in line 28.

28. "If you have not felt the pangs of despised love, the course of your love has been too smooth to conform to the code of courtly love."

29-46. These lines suggest the form of a "bidding prayer," when the priest exhorts the congregation to pray successively for various categories of persons. See Catholic Encyclopaedia s.v. Bede.

36. CpClJ read desespeired. The longer form is metrically necessary in the a reading, but is hypermetrical in the revised text; see variant readings. For the two forms of the word, see NED s.v. Despair, vb. For despeired in the sense of "desperate," see NED s.v. Despaired. Compare Franklin's Tale, F 943,

He was despeyred, no thing dørste he seye, and see line 42 below.

57-60. The number of the ships, and the ten-years' duration of the war, are not mentioned by Boccaccio; but Virgil, Aen. 2.198, gives both facts:

Non anni domuere decem, non mille carinae.

Benoit gives the number of the ships as 1130; see Troie 5701-2, and the note by Constans, Vol. 5, p. 6. For the ten years, see Troie 5805-6:

al disme an, senz nule faille,
Iert tote fin de la bataille.

Notes to 1. 16-109

Guido gives the number of ships as 1222; but cites the statement of Homer that the number was 1186. See Historia, sig. e 3, b, col. 2: Numerus navium, and Ilias Latina 221.

70. Apollo's oracle was situated at Delphi. He is called "Delphicus" by Ovid, Met. 2.543; Fasti 3.856.

71-76. Calchas foresaw the destruction of Troy by several means of divination: by "calkulynge," i.e. by astrological computation; by the responses of Apollo's oracle; by "sort," i.e. by casting lots, or the chance opening of sacred books. Compare 4.114-17 and note.

81. Stal is the regular Chaucerian preterite sing. of stele, steal; see Ten Brink 142.

85. That the aTh reading, "Grete rumour gan," is an authentic a reading, is proved by Fil. 1.10: "Fu romor grande." Note conflated reading of W.

87. The γ reading is certainly corrupt.

88-91. Chaucer is following Fil. 1.10:

Nè quasi per la più gente rimase
Di non andargli col fuoco alle case.

Benoit, Troie 13107-13, says:

Li reis Prianz jure e afe,
S'avair le puet en sa baillie,
Que male fin li fera traire,
C'iert a chevaus rompre e detraire:
"Se por ço non que la pucele
Est franche e proz e sage e bele,
Por lui fust arse e desmembree."

93. Al unwist of, quite uninformed of. The a text reads Un-knowyng for Al unwist. Fil. 1.11 reads:

Senza niente farlene assapere.

Unwist is to be referred to the verb wisse, instruct, rather than to witen, know. Elsewhere in Chaucer, unwist means "unknown."

99. In the word lady, Chaucer regularly preserves the O.E. fem. gen. sing. without -s; see Ten Brink 212.

109. Large, ample, flowing. For large, JGgH5H3 read blak. This is inconsistent with broun; but compare 1.170, 177, 309.

Troilus & Criseyde

111. The a reading, "With chere & voys ful pytous & wepyng," is somewhat nearer to Fil. 1.12.

E con voce e con vista assai pietosa.

114. In this line, H4 presents a conflate reading; see variants.

117-118. "Dismiss your father's treason from your mind, with a curse of ill luck to him." See NED s.v. Mischance, 3. Compare also 5.359. Fil. 1.13 reads:

lascia con la ria ventura
Tuo padre andar.

119. "While it is well pleasing to you."

121. "As completely as when your father dwelled here."

125. "And would have done so again, if Hector had wished."

126. "And went home and lived quietly."

132-133. Chaucer must have read the specific statement of Boccaccio, Fil. 1.15, that Criseida had never had either son or daughter. In Benoit, Briseida is not even a widow; in Troie 13111, Priam refers to her as "la pucele."

139. "Fortune wheeled them aloft, and then under again, in accordance with her revolving course." Compare Chaucer's Fortune 45-6,

Thou born art in my regne of variaunce,
Aboute the wheel with other most thou dryve, and Boethius, 2. pr 2. 37-9: "I [Fortune] torne the whirlinge wheel with the torning cercle; I am glad to chaungen the lowest to the heyest, and the heyest to the lowest." See 1.837-54 and note. I adopt the reading whielen (ie representing long close e) as that which best explains the variants. The verb "to wheel" seems to have puzzled the scribes. H4 reads werle, i.e. "whirl." The reading turne of H5 is obviously a gloss. Weylen and wailen are certainly blunders.

145-147. Chaucer is citing the ultimate sources for the story of the Trojan war; see Introd. pp. xxi-xxiii. Benoit, in his Prologue, cites Homer and Dares as his authorities. Lines 91-2 of the critical text of Troie read:

L'estoire que Daire ot escrite,
En greque langue faite e dite;

but two MSS. present a variant reading:

Et en langue greçoise dite.

With such a MS. before him, Guido in his Prologus cites, after naming Homer, Virgil, and Ovid, "Ditem Graecum et Phrigium Daretem, qui tempore Troiani belli continue in eorum exercitibus fuere presentes et horum quae videre fuerunt fidelissimi relatores" (Historia, sig. a 1, a, col. 2: Prologus). Chaucer's form of the name Dictys (Dite) may be due to a similar reading of this passage in Benoit; or it may be an adaptation of Benoit's regular form Ditis (Dithis), or of the Latin accusative Ditem of Guido (e.g. Historia, sig. o 7, a, col. 1). On this passage see Young, pp. 129-30, and Hamilton, pp. 69-71. Compare also Fame 1466-70, where Homer, Dares, "Tytus" (Dictys), "Lollius," Guido delle Colonne, and Geoffrey of Monmouth are named as "bearers up" of Troy.

152-154. Chaucer is following Fil. 1.17-18. The Palladium was a sacred image of Pallas; so long as it remained in the city, Troy was immune from capture. Shortly before the fall of the city, the treachery of Antenor and Aeneas removed it, and gave it to the Greeks. Compare 4.203-5 and note. According to Benoit, Troie 25406-8:

Rien en terre n'avons si chiere.
C'est l'esperance as Troïens,
C'est lor refuiz e toz lor biens.

See also Guido, Historia, sig. m 3, b, col. 2: Proditio Trojae, and Virgil, Aen. 2.162-70.

157. Veer, the pryme, i.e. the Spring; compare Gower, Conf. Am. 7.1014: "Whan Ver his seson hath begonne."

161. The festival of the Palladion is thought of as a pagan equivalent of Easter. Chaucer places it specifically in the month of April. Boccaccio, Fil. 1.18, merely says that it was springtime. Boccaccio himself first saw Fiammetta in church on an Easter Even (Filocolo 1.5); the date was March 30, 1336 (Young, p. 31). Palladions is apparently to be stressed on first and third syllables; but see variant readings.

162-168. This stanza is expanded from two lines in Filostrato, 1.18:

Alla qual festa e donne e cavalieri
Fur parimente, e tutti volentieri.

Troilus & Criseyde

There is no need to seek any source for the expansion, other than Chaucer's personal experience of such occasions; but one may compare Benoit's account, Troie 17489-524, where knights, ladies, and townspeople throng to the tomb of Hector on the anniversary of his death. It is a time of truce; and Achilles is present, and is taken with the love of Polyxena.

171-172. In the corresponding lines of Boccaccio, Fil. 1.19, one reads:

La qual, quanto la rosa la viola
Di beltà vince, cotanto era questa
Più ch'altra donna bella.

Chaucer has substituted for the comparison of rose to violet the curious statement that "Just as our first letter is now an A, so she stood first and matchless in beauty." In order to rhyme his line, he has in 169 given the lady's name as Criseyda instead of the usual Criseyde. Skeat cites the phrase A-per-se, i.e. the first of its kind, which is applied to the "fair Cresseid" by Henryson, Testament of Cresseid 78. But Henryson may well be echoing the present passage; he seems, at any rate, to be the first to apply A-per-se figuratively (see NED s.v. A, IV, 1, b). Professor Lowes (P.M.L.A. 23.285-306) has made the brilliant suggestion that Chaucer is referring to the initial of Queen Anne's name, used decoratively together with Richard's initial. Now, since the advent of Anne of Bohemia, an A is the first letter in our land of England. If this interpretation is accepted, the allusion serves to date the present passage later than January 14, 1382, the date of Richard's marriage. See Introd., p. xvi.

174. I retain yit, which has a preponderance of MS. authority, even though the line would be metrically more regular without it; see variant readings.

189. Lakken, find fault with; see NED s.v. Lack, vb., 5, 6.

192. Baiten, feed, feast; see NED s.v. Bait, vb., 8.

198. Lewed, ignorant, foolish; see NED s.v. Lewd, 4.

203. Compare 3.329 and note.

205. Ascaunces, as if to say; see NED s.v. Askances, conj. adv., 2.

208. Kidde, pret. of kythe, to make known; see NED s.v. Kithe.

210. "Love can pull out the feathers of other peacocks as proud as Troilus." Compare Prologue, A 652, and the proverb: "proud as a peacock" (Hazlitt, 365).

Notes to 1. 171-238

211-213. From Fil. 1.25:

O cecità delle mondane menti,
Come ne seguon sovente gli effetti
Tutti contrarii a' nostri intendimenti!

Compare Statius, Theb. 5.718-19. Lines 214-66 have no counterpart in Filostrato.

214-216. "Pride will have a fall" (Hazlitt, 364). See note on lines 218-24.

217. A proverb. Compare Usk, Testament of Love 2.8.122: "Alday fayleth thinges that fooles wende"; Barbour, Bruce 1.582: "Bot oft failyeis the fulis thocht."

218-224. Bayard was the name of the bay-colored magic steed given by Charlemagne to Renaud in the chansons de gestes, and hence a kind of mock-heroic name given to any horse (see NED s.v. Bayard). Compare Canon's Yeoman's Tale, G 1413. The spirited simile contained in this stanza is somewhat like a French proverb cited by Düringsfeld, 1. no. 741:

Quand orgueil chevauche ou va le galoppe,
Daim et honte le suit en croppe.

229. A-fere, on fire.

232-252. These lines on the power of love somewhat resemble Benoit's moralizing on the sudden and complete conquest of Achilles by the beauty of Polyxena, Troie 18443-59. Compare:

Qui est qui vers Amors est sage?
Ço n'est il pas ne ne puet estre:
En Amors a trop grevos maistre;
Trop par lit grevose leçon.
Ço parut bien a Salemon.

Compare also Filocolo 1.96-8.

237. Compare 3.1744-71 and note.

238. "No man can undo, set at nought, the law of nature." Compare Usk, Testament of Love 3.1.129-30: "Trewly, lawe of kynde for goddes own lusty wil is verily to mayntene." Compare also Knight's Tale, A 1165-6:

Love is a gretter lawe, by my pan,
Than may be yeve to any erthly man.

Troilus & Criseyde

241-247. Compare Gower, Conf. Am. 6.78-9:

It falleth that the moste wise
Ben otherwhile of love adoted.

Gower cites as examples of wise men in love: Solomon, Virgil, and Aristotle. Compare also Wife of Bath's Prologue, D 721-32, where Samson, Hercules, and Socrates are cited.

257-258. Compare the proverb: "Better to bow than break" (Hazlitt, 100); "Mieux vaut ployer que rompre" (Le Roux de Lincy, 2.349). Compare also 2.1387-9.

266. "I will return to it"; see NED s.v. Refer, 11.

270. "Whether she lived in the town of Troy, or at some country-seat in the region round about."

274. The a text apparently read:

And sodeynly for wonder wax astoned.

See variant readings.

281. Boccaccio, Fil. 1.27, says: "Ell' era grande." Chaucer is following another authority; see 5.806 and note.

285. "And also the mere manner of her bodily movements"; see NED s.v. Pure, adj. 3.

292. Ascaunces, compare 1.205 and note.

297-298. Young (p. 169) cites a parallel from Boccaccio's Fiammetta, p. 9, "E già nella mia mente essendo la effigie della sua figura rimasa," and Benoit, Troie 17555. Compare also Boethius 5. m 4.1-15, 29-32; and see 3.1499.

299-331. Compare Boccaccio's account of his own falling in love with Fiammetta, Filocolo 1.5: "Ma dopo alquanto spazio . . . presi ardire, e intentivamente cominciai a rimirare ne' begli occhi dell' adorna giovane, ne' quali io vidi dopo lungo guardare Amore in abito tanto pietoso, che me, cui lungamente a mia istanza avea risparmiato, fece tornare . . . subietto."

300. He was glad to "draw in his horns," i.e. to lower his pretensions, as the snail, when disturbed, draws in his horn-like tentacles; see NED s.v. Horn, 4 b.

306-307. The "spirit of the heart" is the "vital spirit." The "natural spirit" had its seat in the liver, the "animal spirit" in the brain. Medieval medicine supposed that these highly refined substances, or fluids, passed through the arteries, permeated the vital organs, and controlled their processes. The "vital spirit" controls pulse and breathing (Thorndike, History of Magic, 1.658). The phenomenon of vision was explained on the theory that a "spirit" passes from the brain to the eye through the optic nerve. From the eye it passes with marvelous celerity to the object seen, and thence back to the eye and brain (Thorndike, 2.33). Thomas of Cantimpré explains that the rays proceeding from the eye of a wolf may so dry up the spiritus of a man that the power of speech will be taken from him (Thorndike, 2.385). The "subtil stremes" of Criseyde's eyes produce a similar effect on Troilus. "Right with hire look," the "vital spirit" of Troilus is so affected that his heart stops beating, and his breath fails. Compare Knight's Tale, A 1096-7. One is tempted to believe that Chaucer wrote not deyen but dreyen, dry up; but the MSS. offer no confirmation for such a conjecture. If deyen is an error, it goes back to Chaucer's own scribe.

Notes to 1. 241-359

313. "In order to maintain his usual manner of behavior"—as already described in lines 183-210.

316. Awhaped, stupefied; see NED s.v. Awhaped, and Whaped.

320. Fille, pret. subj. of falle.

327. Borneth, polishes, brightens up; see NED s.v. Burn, vb. 2, H2Ph read unournith, of which mourned of H4 seems to be a corruption. It would look as though a had read anorneth, adorns; see NED s.v. Anorn.

333. Hym tit, to him betideth; see NED s.v. Tide, vb. 1.

336-350. "The religious order to which you belong is governed by an excellent rule of life!" Troilus ironically develops the idea in the two succeeding stanzas. All the observances of the order are uncertain—except a few unimportant points—and yet your ordinance (lay) demands unremitting attention. One of the articles of the "rule" is that lovers must submit patiently to the unreasonable displeasure of their ladies.

349. Groyn, grumbling complaint; compare Knight's Tale, A 2460, and see NED s.v. Groin, sb. 1.

353. "Love caught him as one catches birds, with bird-lime." Compare Wife of Bath's Tale, D 934 and see NED s.v. Lime, vb. 1, 3.

359. "He seated himself on the foot of his bed." For the plural feet, compare Reeve's Tale, A 4213, where feet is authenticated by the rhyme. See also NED s.v. Foot, 5 a.

Troilus & Criseyde

363. And temple. Skeat, following the unique reading of Cl, prints a temple, i.e. in the temple. Globe, adopting the a reading in part only, prints in temple. See variant readings. And temple has overwhelming MS. attestation as the authentic revised reading. It was, despite Cl and S2Dig, certainly the reading of  $\gamma$ ; it is also supported among the  $\beta$  MSS. by JGgH3. R substitutes at for and; Cx is noncommittal.

365. Compare Boethius, 5. m 4. 7-9 (gloss): "Thilke Stoiciens wenden that the sowle hadde ben naked of itself, as a mirour or a clene parchemin."

384-385. Adapted from Fil. 1.36:

Pensando, che amore a molti aperto
Noia acquistava, e non gioia per merto.

Chaucer has supplied the horticultural metaphor.

388. Arten, constrain; see NED s.v. Art, vb. 1.

393-399. For the name "Lollius," see Introd., pp. xxxvi-xl. Chaucer declares that, whereas his author, Lollius, gives only the "sentence" of the song, i.e. its general purport, he will give every word of it fully ("pleinly"), just as Troilus said it, except for the difference in languages. Boccaccio merely says, Fil.

1.37:

E quindi lieto si diede a cantare
Bene sperando.

(Compare line 389 above.) The song in Chaucer, which has no counterpart in Boccaccio, is from Petrarch; see next note.

400-420. The Song of Troilus is closely translated from Petrarch, Sonnet 88 (Rima 133, Carducci):

S'amor non è, che dunque è quel ch'io sento ?
Ma, s'egli è Amor, per Dio che cosa e quale ?
Se bona, ond' è l'effetto aspro mortale ?
Se ria, ond' è sì dolce ogni tormento ?
S'a mia voglia ardo, ond' è 'l pianto e lamento ?
S'a mal mio grado, il lamentar che vale ?
O viva morte, o diletto male,
Come puoi tanto in me, s'io no'l consento ?
E s'io'l consento, a gran torto mi doglio.
Fra sì contrari venti in frale barca
Mi trovo in alto mar, senza governo,

Notes to 1. 363-448

Sì lieve di saver, d'error sì carca,
Ch'i' medesimo non so quel ch'io mi voglio;
E tremo a mezza state, ardendo il verno.

Notice that Chaucer's stanza 58 corresponds to Petrarch's first quatrain, stanza 59 to the second, and stanza 60 to the sestet, except that line 410 seems to correspond to line 13 of the sonnet. Lines 406 and 419 have no parallels in the Italian.

409. Petrarch reads: "S'a mal mio grado," which in modern Italian would be "Se malgrado mio," (French, "Si malgré moi"), i.e. "If against my will." Chaucer's phrase suggests that the text before him may have read: "Se mal mi agrada." "If evil gives me pleasure." (For English agree in the sense of "give pleasure" see NED s.v. Agree, I). Chaucer's phrase seems to have troubled the scribes, see variant readings. (In the reading of JGgH5 etc. the first I must be interpreted as an exclamation; note that H5 reads ey.)

420. The corresponding line in Petrarch ("E tremo, etc.") means, "And I shiver in midsummer, burning in the spring." Chaucer's line suggests Petrarch, Rima 182.5:

Trem' al più caldo, ard' al più freddo cielo.

For the antithesis of heat and cold, compare 1.523-5; 4.511; and Gower, Conf. Am. 6.249.

425-426. Chaucer is translating Fil. 1.38:

Non so s'io dico a donna, ovvero a dea
A servir dato.

Boccaccio may have been thinking of Virgil, Aen. 1.327-8. Troilus's doubt is echoed by Palamon, when he first sees Emily; Knight's Tale, A 1101-2:

I noot wher she be womman or goddesse;
But Venus is it, soothly, as I gesse.

Compare Tes. 3.13-14; but the passage in K.T. is nearer to Troilus than to Teseide.

435-448. Compare Rose (Langlois) 2339-57, where there is a similar playing with the idea of fire:

E saches que dou regarder
Feras ton cuer frire e larder,
Et tot adès en regardant
Aviveras le feu ardent, etc. (2341-4.)

Troilus & Criseyde

449. Compare Rose (Langlois) 2358,

Qui plus est près dou feu plus art;

and Machaut, Jugement dou Roy de Behaingue 1743:

Et cils qui est plus près dou feu, plus s'art.

455. Polyxena, daughter of Priam and Hecuba, beloved of Achilles. Fil. 1.42 reads:

avanza Polissena

D'ogni bellezza, e similmente Elena.

458. "Good goodly one, to serve whom I labor." This is a nine-syllable line, unless one reads serven, for which there is no MS. authority. The word-order is abnormal. Skeat, without authority, reads: "to whom serve I and laboure"; Globe, equally without authority, reads: "whom to serven I laboure." The Globe reading is a tempting emendation; but I have preferred to follow the overwhelming testimony of the MSS., even though it convict Chaucer of an awkward line.

465. Fownes, fawns; compare Duchess 429. Originally fawn means the young of any animal; it was later specialized to mean a young deer; see NED s.v. Fawn, sb. 1, 1. "Desire bred in Troilus no other offspring but reasons in support of the conclusion he wished." The curious metaphor, which has no parallel in Filosttrato, was a source of confusion to the scribes; see variant readings.

470. Fil. 1.45 reads:

L'aspre battaglia e gli stormi angosciosi

Ch'Ettore e gli altri suoi frate' faceano.

Chaucer's felle, cruel, dreadful, seems to translate angosciosi. Shoures, which seems to translate stormi, has its common M.E. sense of "attack, assault"; see NED s.v. Shower, sb. 1, 5. The whole line apparently means: "The sharp and dreadful assaults, of martial prowess the proof."

472. "Did not once make him move on their account," i.e. in emulation.

480-481. Chaucer's Squire also fought,

In hope to stonden in his lady grace.

(Prologue, A 88.)

Notes to 1. 449-630

483. The deth, the pestilence; see NED s.v. Death, 8. Compare Prologue, A 605, and Pardoner's Tale, C 675.

517-518. Compare Fame 639-40:

Although thou mayst go in the daunce
Of hem that him [Love] list not avaunce.

523-525. From Fil. 1.53:

Fredda come al sereno interza il ghiaccio,
Ed io qual neve al fuoco mi disfaccio.

Compare 1.420; 4.511.

526-527. Chaucer's figure of the "port of death" is derived from Fil. 1.54. Compare 1.606.

530. "For if my hidden sorrow be blown abroad."

532. There would seem to be a specific allusion to some medieval Dunciad; but I have not been able to identify it.

557. NED defines Attrition, in its theological sense, as "An imperfect sorrow for sin, as if a bruising which does not amount to utter crushing (contrition) 'horror of sin through fear of punishment, without any loving sense, or taste of God's mercy' (Hooker), while contrition has its motive in the love of God."

559. Skeat glosses leye on presse as "compress, diminish," and cites Prologue, A 81. Presse has rather, I think, the sense of "cupboard with shelves" (NED s.v. Press, sb. 1, 14; compare Miller's Tale, A 3212). The whole phrase would mean "shut up in the closet, lay on the shelf."

560. Holynesse, religious piety; see article by Tatlock, Studies in Philology 18.422-5 (1921).

569. The Brit. Mus. MS. of Filostrato (Addit. 21, 246) reads in 2.2:

Troyolo disse pandar qual fortuna t a qui condotto a vedermi qui languire.

This is nearer to Chaucer than Moutier's reading, "vedermi morire."

570. Refus, a participial adjective, "rejected, thrown aside as worthless"; see NED s.v. Refuse, adj., A.

617-618. In the Roman de la Rose, one is advised to have a friend to whom one can speak of one's love (Langlois 2686-716).

626. "That one whom excess causes to fare full evilly."

630. Compare the proverb: "A fool may give a wise man counsel" (Hazlitt, 13; Düringsfeld 2. no. 151). See Rabelais, Pantagruel 3.37: "J'ay souvent ouy en proverbe vulgaire qu'un fol enseigne bien un saige." Compare 1.635; 3.329. Fil. 2.10 reads:

E benchè l'uom non prenda buon consiglio,
Donar lo puote nell' altrui periglio.

631-632. The spelling wheston for "whetstone" has overwhelming MS. authority. Hazlitt (p. 43) records the proverb: "A whetstone, though it can't itself cut, makes tools cut."

637. Compare Rose (Michel) 25582-5:

Ainsinc va des contraires choses.
Les unes sunt des autres gloses,
Et qui l'une en vuet défenir,
De l'autre li doit sovenir.

These lines from Rose follow closely on those quoted in the next note.

638-644. This stanza, which has no counterpart in Boccaccio, is based on Rose (Michel) 22562-74, where it is explained that the gourmand tries various dishes—

Et set loer et set blasmer
Liquex sunt dous, liquex amer,
Car de plusors en a goustés.
Ausinc sachiés, et n'en doutés,
Que qui mal essaié n'aura,
Jà du bien gaires ne saura;
Et qui ne set d'onor que monte,
Jà ne saura congnoistre honte;
N'onc nus ne sot quel chose est aise,
S'il n'ot avant apris mésaise, etc.

Compare 3.1212-20, and note on 3.1219-20. See also Piers Plowman, C 21.209-21.

651. "It shall less injure thee"; see NED s.v. Dere, vb.

653-655. The allusion is to Ovid's epistle of Oenone, Her. 5.

659-665. Apollo, as patron of the arts, is the inventor of medicine. Vincent of Beauvais, Speculum Doctrinale, Lib. 14, Cap. 1, says, citing "Ysidorus in libro ethy. iiii": "Hujus artis inventor apud Grecos (ut fertur) Apollo fuit. . . . Prima methodica inventa est ab apolline." In Ovid, Her. 5.149-53, Oenone writes to Paris :

Notes to 1. 631-707

Me miseram, quod amor non est medicabilis herbis !
Deficior prudens artis ab arte mea.
Ipse repertor opis vaccas pavisse Pheraeas
Fertur et e nostro saucius igne fuit.

(Pherae was the capital city of King Admetus, whom Apollo served as a herdsman.) In Boccaccio, Tes. 4.46 we read :

Siccome te alcuna volta Amore
Costrinse il chiaro cielo abbandonare,
E lungo Anfriso in forma di pastore
Del grande Admeto gli armenti guardare ;

and in Tes. 3.25 :

Poichè Apollo, sentita
Cotal saetta, che i succhi mondani
Tutti conobbe, non seppe vedere
Medela a sè che potesse valere ?

674. Compare Knight's Tale, A 1133,

That never, for to dyen in the peyne ; and 3.1502.

687-688. "It is equally wrong to mistrust everyone, or to believe everyone." Compare Seneca, Ad Lucilium, Ep. 3.4 : "Utrumque enim vitium est, et omnibus credere et nulli."

694-695. R has marginal gloss : "Salamon Ve soly" ; and S1 : "Ve so. . . ." The reference is to Ecclesiastes 4.10 : "Vae soli ; quia cum ceciderit, non habet sublevantem se."

699-700. Niobe, weeping for her seven sons and seven daughters, slain by Apollo and Diana, was turned into a stone, "et lacrimas etiam nunc marmora manant." (Ovid, Met. 6.312.) Compare "Etiam nunc" and "yit."

701-707. The first three lines of this stanza follow closely the first three lines of Fil. 2.13. The remainder of the stanza, which is not in Boccaccio, seems to reproduce Seneca, Ep. 99.26 : "Quod enim est turpius quam captare in ipso luctu voluptatem, immo per luctum, et inter lacrimas quoque juvet, quaerere ?" In the margin of line 704, R has a gloss : "Require in Metamorphosios."

Troilus & Criseyde

After a good deal of searching, I have found no parallel in Met. closer than 9.142-3 (which is not very close!):

Indulsit primo lacrimis, flendoque dolorem
Diffudit miseranda suum.

708-709. Compare the modern proverb: "Misery loves company," and Hazlitt 119: "Company in misery makes it light." R has marginal gloss: "Salemon, Consolacio miserorum, etc." and S1 (margin trimmed): "consolacio [miserorum] habere [consor] tem in pe[na]." This Latin proverb (which is not in Solomon) appears in Marlowe's Faustus 474 as a hexameter line: "Solamen miseris socios habuisse doloris." For an inconclusive discussion of the line in Marlowe, see H. Logeman, Faustus Notes 55-7. Compare Canon's Yeoman's Tale, G 746-7. Chaucer's lines find their suggestion in Fil. 2.13.

713. Harde grace, ill luck; see NED s.v. Grace, sb., 10.

714. R has marginal gloss: "Require in Ouidio." I have been unable to find any Ovidian parallel.

730. Litargie, lethargy. Compare Boethius, 1. pr 2. 14-15: "He is fallen into a litargie, whiche that is a comune sykenes to hertes that ben deceived." (Philosophy is applying her "medicine" to the sorrows of Boethius.)

731-735. R has marginal gloss: "Baicius de consolacione philosophie." Compare Boethius 1. pr 4.1-2: "Felestow, quod she, thise thinges, and entren they aught in thy corage? Artow lyke an asse to the harpe?" Le Roux de Lincy, 1.144, quotes a fifteenth-century proverb: "Ung asne n'entend rien en musique." Compare also Düringsfeld, 2. no. 591.

740-742. Compare the proverb: "He makes a rod for his own breech" (Hazlitt, 195); and Le Roux de Lincy, 2.478: "Maint homme oinst la verge dont il meismes est batu." If one tells his secret, one puts a weapon into the hands of his confidant.

747-748. Compare Rose (Langlois) 7557-8:

Or deit chacier, or deit foïr
Qui veaut de bone amour joïr.

762-763. Compare 1.704-7; 4.1255-7.

780. Bendiste, an abbreviated pronunciation of the Latin benedicite, bless ye. The abbreviated form is found in CpH1J; Gg writes benediste. The remaining MSS. write benedicite; but the metre clearly demands a trisyllable. It is the first word of the canticle Benedicite omnia, sung by the Three Children in the fiery furnace. It is used as a common exclamation, with about the force of "Lord bless me!"; see NED s.v. Benedicite, and compare 3.757, 860.

Notes to 1. 708-854

786-788. The fate of Tityos is told by Virgil, Aen. 6.595-600 (compare Ovid, Met. 4.457-8); but Chaucer is clearly indebted to Boethius, 3. m 12. 28, where Chaucer's translation reads: "the fowl that highte voltor, that eteth the stomak or the giser of Tityus, is so fulfild of his song that it nil eten ne tyren no more." The Latin reads: "Vultur dum satur est modis, Non traxit Tityi iecur." Similarity in phrasing suggests that Chaucer was referring to his own translation; note "stomak" as a translation of "iecur." H2PhH4, which give the a text, wrongly read Sicriphus.

794. Wantrust, lack of confidence; see NED s.v.

810-812. Compare Rose (Michel) 21878-81:

D'autre part, en maintes contrées
Ont maint maintes dames amées,
Et les servirent quanqu'il porent,
N'onques un sol baisier n'en orent.

833. "Have me drawn by horses and then hung."

837-854. Troilus blames Fortune for his troubles; Pandarus defends the fickle goddess. So, at the beginning of the second book of the De Consolatione, Philosophy instructs Boethius as to the qualities of Fortune: "She, cruel Fortune, casteth adoun kinges that whylom weren ydrad; and she, deceivable, enhaunseth up the humble chere of him that is discomfited. . . . Thus she pleyeth, and thus she proeveth hir strengthes." (2. m 1. 5-11; cf. 1.839-40) "Natheles dismaye thee nat in thy thought; and thou that art put in the comune realme of alle, ne desyre nat to liven by thyn only propre right." (2. pr 2. 60-2; cf. 1.843-4.) "For if thou therfor wenest thyself nat weleful, for thinges that tho semeden joyful ben passed, ther nis nat why thou sholdest wene thyself a wrecche; for thinges that semen now sorye passen also." (2. pr 3. 52-4; cf. 1.845-7.) "Enforcest thou thee to aresten or withholden the swiftnesse and the sweigh of hir turninge whele? O thou fool of alle mortal fooles, if Fortune bigan to dwelle stable, she cesede thanne to ben Fortune!" (2. pr 1. 80-4; cf. 1.848-50.) "What eek yif my mutabilitee yiveth thee rightful cause of hope to han yit beter thinges?" (2. pr 2. 58-60; cf. 1.851-4.) For Chaucer's conception of Fortune, see B. L. Jefferson, Chaucer and Boethius 49-60.

Troilus & Criseyde

857-858. From Boethius, 1. pr 4.3-4: "Yif thou abydest after help of thy leche, thee bihoveth discovere thy wounde." Unwre, uncover (O.E. wrēon, cover). Other MSS. read unwry or unwrie, an analogical formation from wrigen, past participle of wrēon (see Wild, pp. 312-13). Le Roux de Lincy, 1.267, cites a fifteenth century proverb:

Qui veult la garison du mire,
Il lui convient son mal dire.

859. Cerberus, the canine guardian of hell. See Ovid, Met. 4.450; but it would be idle to seek a definite source for so familiar an allusion.

860-861. Compare 3.407-13, where Troilus, in his gratitude, makes a similar offer to Pandarus.

890-896. This stanza is found in H2PhH4(a) and in Th; the remaining MSS., and Cx, omit it. There is nothing to cast doubt on the genuineness of the stanza, which has the unmistakable ring of Chaucer's manner. Moreover, the first line of stanza 129 seems to echo line 890. It has no counterpart in Filostrato; but the same is true of the ten stanzas which follow. But, beautiful as the stanza is in itself, it breaks the continuity of the thought. Both before and after, Pandarus is speaking primarily of Criseyde, and is basing his hope for Troilus on the qualities of his niece's character. In the stanza under discussion, he turns to moralize on the strength which comes from being at peace with one's self. The excision of the stanza leaves no gap in the thought, but rather consolidates it. Its cancellation would seem to be an authentic revision.

891-893. Compare Seneca, Ep. 2.1; "Primum argumentum compositae mentis existimo posse consistere et secum morari"; and Boethius, 2. pr 4.96-101: "I shal shewe thee shortly the poynt of sovereyne blisfulnesse . . . yif it so be that thou art mighty over thyself, that is to seyn, by tranquillitee of thy sowle, than hast thou thing in thy power that thou noldest never lesen, ne Fortune ne may nat beneme it thee." Ordeyne is a tri-syllable with stress on first and third syllables. It is the past participle of the Anglo-French ordeiner, to regulate.

897-903. Since Criseyde has all the other virtues, she must have also Pity, which is "coroune of vertues alle" (Complaint to Pity 58). Pity, as the active manifestation of Charity (cf. Gower, Conf. Am. 2.3174), is the supreme mark of Christian behavior. It was Pity that moved God to send His Son to earth for our salvation (Conf. Am. 7.3103 ff.). It is an outstanding attribute of the Blessed Virgin (A.B.C. 68). Among the virtues symbolized by the pentangle on Gawain's shield is "pite, þat passeȝ alle poynteȝ" (Gawain and the Green Knight 654). Compare Cant. Tales, B 660, F 479. The change of meaning which has developed the modern, and M.E., pity from Latin pietatem is an eloquent tribute to the predominance of this virtue. But Troilus must not expect that Criseyde's pity shall go so far as to lead to the blemishing of her good name; for a virtue which is stretched to the point of bringing shame on itself is no longer a virtue.

912-913. Gawin Douglas copies these lines in Aeneis, Prol. to Book IV, line 21:

And ȝour trew servandis silly goddis apis.

Ape means "fool" (cf. Prologue, A 706). God's ape seems to mean "natural born fool"; see NED s.v. Ape, 4.

914. Mucche, eat; see NED s.v. Mouch.

916. Blaunche fevere, white fever, i.e. a fever which turns its victims pale. Gower's Lover (Conf. Am. 6.239) also suffers from "blanche fievere." The symptoms are chills and shivers:

And so it coldeth at myn herte,
That wonder is hou I asterte,
In such a point that I ne deie.
For certes ther was nevere keie
Ne frosen ys upon the wal
More inly cold than I am al.

Similarly the lover in The Cuckoo and the Nightingale, 41, is "shaken with the fevers whyte."

918-919. Som here (and in 916) is singular; hence the singular reflexive hym. In 920 (and in 914) some is plural. See NED s.v. Some, I. The meaning of the lines is not clear. Take on may mean "make a fuss about" (NED s.v. Take, 84 j) or perhaps "put on clothing" (ibid. 84 a, b). For the colde should mean "because of the cold," or "against the cold." The reference seems to be to the coldness which is a symptom of "blaunche fevere."

927-928. "And thought that, by trying everywhere, they would be sure to succeed in some quarter." Compare Rose (Michel) 22560-1:

Qu'il fait bon de tout essaier
Por soi miex ès biens esgaier.

946-949. A close translation of Ovid, Remedia Amoris 45-6:

Terra salutare herbas eademque nocentes
Nutrit, et urticae proxima saepe rosast.

Compare Alanus de Insulis, Liber Parabolarum, ed. Migne, col. 582:

Fragrantes vicina rosas urtica perurit;

and Gower, Mirour de l'Omme 3721-3.

950. Compare Filocolo 2.276: "La tua doglia è grandissima; ma chi dubiterà che dopo gli altissimi monti non sia una profonda valle?"

951-952. Compare Alanus de Insulis, Liber Parabolarum, ed. Migne, col. 583 C:

Post noctem sperare diem, post nubila solem,
Post lacrymas risum, laetitiamque potes.

953. Compare Boethius, 5. m 1.13-15.

954. Suffre to the tyde, yield to the hour or season (whether favorable or unfavorable). NED records no instance of the phrase "suffer to."

956. Compare Melibeus, B 2244: "The proverbe seith: 'he hasteth wel that wysely can abyde'; and 'in wikked haste is no profit.'" See 4.1568 and note.

960-961. Compare Seneca, Ad Lucilium, Ep. 2.2: "Nusquam est, qui ubique est." See also Boethius, 3. pr 11.51-4. But Chaucer's lines are nearer to Rose (Langlois) 2245-6, where, as in Chaucer, the talk is of success in love:

Qui en mainz leus son cuer depart,
Par tot en a petite part.

Compare also Boethius, 3. pr 11. 46-51.

Notes to 1. 927-1015

964-966. Compare Seneca, Ad Lucilium, Ep. 23: "Non convalescit planta, quae saepe transfertur." As Koeppel pointed out, this sentence of Seneca is quoted by Albertano of Brescia, Liber de Amore Dei, fol. 45 b.

969. The corresponding line in Boccaccio (Fil. 2. 24) reads:

Sta' dunque fermo nell' atto proposto.

Chaucer's figure of the harbor seems to have been suggested by Rose (Langlois) 12760:

A bon port estes arivez.

Compare Ovid, Art. Am. 2.9-10.

971-972. "For unless your dejection of spirits, or your overhaste, destroy the work of both of us"; see NED s.v. Dreariness, 1.

976-979. Boccaccio's Pandaro says in the corresponding context, Fil. 2.27:

Io credo certo, ch'ogni donna in voglia
Viva amorosa.

I have not been able to discover who are the "wyse lered" on whose authority the Italian lines are expanded.

985-987. In Fil. 2.25-6, Pandaro utters a somewhat different sentiment. He recognizes that public opinion is such that a love-affair will injure the reputation of a lady, if it is found out. What was once honorable is now, because of our folly, a matter of shame. But if a lover is discreet, he may rightly follow his high desires.

1000-1001. "Thou shalt be the best pillar of his creed." Compare Prologue, A 214.

1001. I read moste (pret. subj. 2d sing. of mot); but the scribes seem to have understood the superlative most. Both  $\gamma$  and JRS1 have attempted emendations for the sake of the metre.

1002-1008. St. Augustine of Hippo is a case in point.

1011. Boccaccio says, Fil. 2.29:

Quasi già fuor di tutto il suo tormento.

The subject of wex is Troilus, carried over from 1009.

1014-1015. "With the help of Venus, I may, before I die, be able to do something to deserve thy thanks, Pandarus."

Troilus & Criseyde

1021-1022. In these lines, for the first time, we learn that Pandarus is the uncle of Criseyde. For the manere, in accordance with the conventions of good behavior; see NED s.v. Manner, 3 a. Fil. 2.30 reads:

per mostrarti
D'essere onesta, non vorrà ascoltarti.

1024. The fears of Troilus are as idle as to worry lest the Man in the Moon should fall out of his orb. The idea of a Man in the Moon is at least as old as Alexander Neckam's De Natura Rerum (twelfth cent.); see ed. in Rolls Series, (No. 34), p. 54. The fear of his fall is found in a poem in Boeddeker's Alteng. Dicht., p. 176:

Mon in þe mone stond & strit,
On is bot forke is burþen he bereþ;
Hit is mucþe wonder þat he nadoun slyt,
For doute leste he valle, he shoddreþ and shereþ.

1026. "Attend to your own business (and stop worrying about the affairs of other people)."

1038. And I thi borugh!, "And I thy surety!", i.e. "I'll be bound no lover has any other intentions"; see NED s.v. Borrow, sb., 2 b. Compare 2.134. The original meaning of borrow is "pledge, security"; hence the verb borrow, to take a thing on pledge or security given for its safe return.

1042-1043. From Fil. 2.32:

Questa fatica tutta sarà mia,
E'l dolce fine tuo voglio che sia.

Compare 1.21.

1050. "And yet I regret that this boast escaped me"; see NED s.v. Athink.

1052. "Thou art wise; thou knowest; thou hast power; thou art everything." Fil. 2.33 reads:

Tu savio, tu amico, tu sai tutto
Ciò che bisogni a dar fine al mio lutto.

1058. Desirous. The stress falls on first and last syllables; compare 2.1101, and Squire's Tale, F 23.

1065-1069. Compare Boethius, 4. pr 6.57-60: "For right as a werkman, that aperceyveth in his thoght the forme of the thing that he wol make, and moeveth the effect of the werk, and ledeth that he hadde loked biforn in his thoght simply and presently, etc." The word line carries on the idea of the carpenter and his measuring line, or plumb line; see NED s.v. Line, 4.

1073. The bay steed of Troilus is again mentioned in 2.624, and 5.1038.

1074. Compare Fil. 7.80.

1078. The line is repeated, with change of pronoun, in Clerk's Tale, E 413, where it is said of Griselda.

1092. Skeat adopts the reading driveth of H2PhH5AS1CxTh; but the weight of the MS. evidence is overwhelmingly in favor of dryeth, endures. The meaning of dryeth forth is "continues to live through"; see NED s.v. Dree, 5.

NOTES TO BOOK TWO

NOTES TO BOOK TWO

1-6. These lines somewhat resemble Dante, Purg. 1.1-3:

Per correr migliori acque alza le vele
Omai la navicella del mio ingegno,
Che lascia dietro a sé mar sì crudele.

As Dante's poem leaves behind the Inferno, and enters Purgatory, so Chaucer's turns from the despair of Troilus to the beginning of his hope. For the metaphor of a sea voyage, compare also Ovid, Remedia Amoris 811-12, and Fil. 9.3-4.

4. I adopt the reading konnyng of H<sup>3</sup>H<sup>4</sup>H<sup>5</sup>S<sup>1</sup>CxTh. Gg, which lacks the first twelve stanzas of Book II, presumably shared this reading with the closely related H<sup>5</sup>. Since R omits the Proem, its testimony is lacking. The alternative reading commynng has the support of γJH<sup>2</sup>Ph, but does not seem to make sense in the context. With konnyng, the lines means: "That with all my skill I can hardly steer my poetic bark" (so heavily does it labor in the tempestuous sea of Troilus's despair).

7. Kalendes, the first day of any month in the Roman calendar, and hence any beginning; see NED s.v. Calends, 4, and compare 5.1634. NED quotes King's Quair 177: "Gave me in hert kalendis of confort."

8-11. Clio is the Muse of history. Chaucer means that his story is sober matter of record. He needs no art of invention; it is enough if he can "ryme wel" the story as he finds it. As a matter of fact, Book II departs very widely from Boccaccio. H<sup>4</sup> has marginal gloss: "Cleo domina eloquentie"; but the marginal notes of H<sup>4</sup> are probably not of Chaucer's composition.

13. Sentement, knowledge based on my own emotional experience; see NED s.v. Sentiment, 1. Compare 3.43 and Legend, Prol. B 69. Chaucer several times assures us that he writes of love only on the authority of others; see below 2.19-20, and Parliament 8-11, 160-8. Compare also 1.15-18; 3.1408-13.

14. The Latin which Chaucer says he is translating is the Latin of "Lollius." One cannot accept Skeat's statement that "Latin seems, in this case, to mean Italian, which was called Latino volgare." Apparently the "Latin" to which Chaucer refers was written a thousand years before his time; see below 2.23. See also Introd., p. xxxvii.

Troilus & Criseyde

18. Myn auctour, i.e. "Lollius."

21. A proverb of wide currency. "Blind men should judge no colors" (Hazlitt, 105). See Düringsfeld 1. no. 244. Compare Dante, De Vulg. Eloq. 2.6.27: "quos non aliter deridemus quam caecum de coloribus distinguentem." (As Lowes points out, Mod. Phil. 14.710-11, the words of Dante are in a somewhat similar context.)

22-25. Derived ultimately from Horace, Art. Poet. 69-72:

Nedum sermonum stet honos et gratia vivax,
Multa renascentur quae jam cecidere, cadentque
Quae nunc sunt in honore vocabula, si volet usus,
Quem penes arbitriumst et jus et norma loquendi.

Compare Wace, Roman de Rou 77-80:

Par lunc tens e par lungs aages,
E par muement de langages,
Unt perdu lur premerains nuns,
Viles, citez e regiuns.

Compare also Seneca, Ad Lucilium, Ep. 114.13; Dante, Convito 1.5.55-66; 2.14.83-9 (where Horace is quoted).

28. Skeat cites Proverbs of Hendyng 29: "Ase fele thede, as fele thewes." Compare also Boethius, 2. pr 7.49: "Quid quod diversarum gentium mores inter se atque instituta discordant, ut quod apud alios laude apud alios supplicio dignum judicetur." See Usk, Testament of Love 1.5.43, and compare below 2.42.

36-37. Went and halt are present tense, wendeth, holdeth. Compare Alanus de Insulis, Liber Parobolarum, ed. Migne, col. 591:

Mille viae ducunt homines per saecula Romam.

41. Forme, behavior according to customary rules of etiquette; see NED s.v. Form, sb., 15. Perhaps one should omit the comma after visityng, and interpret the whole phrase as "formal visiting."

42. A proverb of wide currency; see Düringsfeld 2. no. 6, and Le Roux de Lincy, 2.418: "Tant de gens tant de guise." Compare 2.28 and note.

45-46. "For in furthering thy purpose this speech may please thee (one person), and thee (another person) not at all; yet all sorts of speeches are spoken, and must be spoken."

Notes to 2. 18-70

50-55. May is the "mother of the glad months," because it initiates the most delightful months of the year. NED s.v. May, sb. 3, 1, cites Dunbar, Gold. Targe 82: "there saw I May, of myrthfull monethis quene." A thoroughly conventional spring-time passage; compare 3.351-4; Prologue, A 1-10; Tes. 3.5-6; Petrarch, Sonn. 42 (In morte); Rose (Langlois) 45-66.

54-55. In Chaucer's time the Sun entered Taurus ("the white Bole") about April 12, and passed from Taurus into the next sign, Gemini, a month later. We are told in line 50 that the month is May. Line 55 explains that it is early May; and line 56 specifies the date as May 3. On May 3 the Sun would be in about the 20th degree of Taurus, or a little past the middle of the sign. He would therefore spread his bright beams "right in" the sign. Compare Nun's Priest's Tale, B 4377-85. For the whiteness of the Bull, see Ovid, Met. 2.852.

56. Why Chaucer specifies the third of May is not clear. The day seems to have had some special significance, which has not yet been explained. It was "in May, the thridde night" that Palamon escaped from prison (Knight's Tale, A 1463); it was on May 3 that Chauntecleer was carried off by the fox (Nun's Priest's Tale, B 4377-85). May 3 is ecclesiastically the feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross; but this seems to offer no clue as to Chaucer's use of the date. May 3 is one of the "Egyptian days" or "dismal days" (see NED s.v. Dismal), on which it was unlucky to begin any new undertaking. (For Egyptian days, see Vincent of Beauvais, Spec. Nat. Lib. 16, Cap. 83; Salmasius, De Annis Climacteris, ed. 1648, pp. 815-19; Thorndike, History of Magic, 1.685-8.) May 3, which was also a Friday (B 4531), was an unlucky day for Chauntecleer; but the fact that it is an Egyptian day does not seem to explain the date in Knight's Tale, or in Troilus. Possibly, however, the unlucky day brought Pandarus his "teene in love." Somewhat similar is the situation of the lover in The Cuckoo and the Nightingale, where (line 55) "the thridde night of May" is also specified as the date. Compare also Duchess 1206: "I trowe it was in the dismal," and see Skeat's note on that passage.

64-70. Progne, sister of Philomela, and wife of Tereus, was metamorphosed into a swallow. Her sister, Philomela, attracted the desire of Tereus, who tore out her tongue. The story is told by Ovid, Met. 6.412-674. Compare Chaucer's Legend of Philomela; but, in the Legend, Progne is not "forshapen." The present passage seems to echo Dante, Purg. 9.13-15:

Troilus & Criseyde

Nell' ora che comincia' i tristi lai
La rondinella presso alla mattina,
Forse a memoria de' suoi primi guai.

See also Tes. 4.73.

74. Before starting a journey, or beginning any important enterprise, it was important to discover whether the time was astrologically propitious. In the matter of journeys, the "plight," or condition, of the Moon was of primary importance. A complete magician, such as Calchas, would have constructed a "figure of the heavens," with the Moon and other planets accurately disposed according to their positions in the zodiac. Pandarus was probably content to calculate the day of the lunar month, and then to consult a Lunarium, or "moon-book," to learn whether the day was propitious for his undertaking. See Thorndike, History of Magic, 1.680-2, and compare Man of Law's Tale, B 309-15.

77. H4 has marginal gloss: "Janus deus introit." Compare Ovid, Fasti 1.125-7. As god of entries, Janus gives his name to the first month of the year.

84. See note on 2.100-8.

100-108. The story of Thebes is told in the Thebais of Statius, and in the twelfth century Roman de Thèbes (ed. Constans, Antiens Textes français, 1890). Chaucer certainly knew the former; it is probable that he also knew the latter, or some redaction of it. The word romaunce (line 100) points towards the French; the mention of "bookes twelve" (line 108) towards the Latin. The death of Laius at the hands of his son Oedipus (101-2) is more fully given in the French (Thèbes 175-224) than in Statius, where these events are implied rather than related (1.56 ff.). The death of Amphiaras, who "fil thorough the ground to helle," is told by Statius in the closing lines of Book VII. The Roman de Thèbes (4711-842) gives the episode with much medieval elaboration. The Spalding MS. of Thèbes is particularly interesting.

Notes to 2. 74-134

Amphiaraus falls living into hell, and after passing the infernal rivers, is slain by Pluto's trident (see Constans, 2.16). Statius refers to Amphiaraus as "vates" (Theb. 7.815); in Thèbes 2026 he is called "Un arcevesque mout corteis" (cf. also 5053, 5079). Compare 5.1500, and Anelida 57.

103-105. Lettres rede, i.e. a rubric at the head of a section of the poem. Lines 104, 105 quote such a rubric. In Lydgate's Story of Thebes, as printed in Speght's 1598 Chaucer, we find on fol. 390 a, the heading: "How the Bishop Amphiorax fell downe into hell."

110. Wympel. γ81 and a read barbe. Either term will fit the context. The wimple was "a covering of silk, linen, or other material, laid in folds over the head and round the chin, the sides of the face, and the neck" (Cent. Dict.). It survives to the present day in the head-dress of nuns. The word barbe applies to a portion of the wimple, "consisting of a piece of white plaited linen, passed over or under the chin, and reaching midway to the waist" (NED s.v. Barb, sb. 2, 3). When Chaucer says of the Prioress (Prologue, A 151), "Ful semely hir wimpel pinched was," he is thinking of the plaited "barb." Fairholt, Costume in England 2.28, says the barb was "peculiar to the religious sisterhood or to widows"; but see J. H. de Hefner-Alteneck, Costumes, Vol. 4, Plates 222, 228, which would indicate a more general use of the barb as part of a lady's dress. Wympel seems to be an authentic revision. Perhaps the reason for the substitution was a desire to avoid the assonance of barbe and bare.

112. Compare Knight's Tale, A 1500:

And, for to doon his observaunce to May;

and Skeat's note on the passage. The proper observance of May is to go into the fields and gather flowers and greenery, rather than to sit in a "paved parlour" and listen to the tale of Thebes.

113. I, an exclamation. See variant readings, and compare 2.128.

117. It satte. Skeat reads sete and notes: "The right reading is necessarily sete, for A.S. sæte, 3 p.s. pt. t. subj. of sitten." But there is no MS. authority for Skeat's form. H5Cx read sit; all the other authorities give satte, sate, or sat. Satte is to be explained as a new analogical subjunctive, formed from the indicative sat.

134. Compare 1.1038.

Troilus & Criseyde

150-151. "They began to discuss many unfamiliar, joyous, and serious topics." Skeat interprets unkouth as an adverb modifying gladde, with the sense "exceeding"; but NED, s.v. Uncouth, Unco, lists no such adverbial use earlier than the eighteenth century.

154. Hector is a wall of protection for Troy, and a rod of chastisement for the Greeks.

156. In Benoit's account of the earlier battles of the war, Hector is several times wounded; but, when the nature of the wound is specified, it is always in the face. See the Table des Noms Propres in the edition of Constans s.v. Hector. Chaucer seems to have no specific episode in mind.

158-161. These lines, which have no counterpart in Boccaccio, seem to echo Guido, Historia, sig. e 2, b, col. 1: Statura Troianorum: "In viribus vero et strennuitate bellandi vel fuit alius Hector, vel secundus ab ipso. In toto etiam regno Troiae juvenis nullus fuit tantis viribus nec tanta audacia gloriosus." The corresponding passage in Benoit, Troie 5439-46, contains the lines:

E li plus proz, fors que sis frere

Hector . . .

Flor fu cil de chevalerie,

E cist l'en tint mout bien frarie.

Compare 3.1774-5.

167-168. Compare Rose (Langlois) 5660-2:

Lucans redit, qui mout fu sages,

Qu'onques vertu e grant poeir

Ne pot nus ensemble voeir.

These lines follow immediately on the account of Appius and Virginia, which Chaucer used in the Physician's Tale. Compare Lucan, Pharsalia 8.494-5: "virtus et summa potestas Non coeunt."

189. "Of those that I should most like to be praised by." The phrase of hem is to be construed both with alle pris, in the preceding line, and with preysed be.

191-203. This account of the martial exploits of Troilus has no counterpart in Boccaccio; nor can I discover any episode of Benoit, or of Guido, which specifically corresponds to it. Nearest, perhaps, is the feat of Troilus in the Eighteenth Battle, where he drives the Myrmidons in confusion to their tents (Troie 21004-

Notes to 2. 150-387

24). But this battle is long after the separation of Troilus and Briseida, and shortly before the death of Troilus. Both Benoit and Guido give countless instances of the valor of Troilus. See for example Historia sig. k 4, b, col. 1: Potentia Troili.

220. Various scribes have tried to regularize the metre of this line; see variant readings. Skeat adopts the reading is it tyme, found in H2H3GgH5.

236. "Apart from the question of amorous relations"; see NED s.v. Paramour, 2.

248. Fremde, distant, like a stranger; see NED s.v. Fremd, 3. I adopt the reading fremde without hesitation, though found only in AD and Th, since the context will not permit frende which has the authority of the MSS. One must assume that the error, a substitution of a familiar for an unfamiliar word, was present in the original of all the MSS., and that AD and Th have correctly emended.

260. Compare the proverb in MS. Douce 52: "þe last word byndeth þe tale" (Festschrift zum XII Allgemeinen Deutschen Neuphilologentage in Muenchen, Erlangen, 1906, p. 47).

261. Bhovely, useful; compare Parson's Tale, I 386.

273. "Therefore I will try to adapt myself to her tender mind."

281-287. From Fil. 2.44:

Sol una volta ha nel mondo ventura
Qualunque vive, se la sa pigliare;
Chi lei vegnente lascia, sua sciagura
Pianga da sè senz' altrui biasimare.

Compare Shakespeare's Julius Caesar 4.3.218.

328. "You have had a good day's fishing."

329. "How are you to improve, though we both get worse?"

344. Vertules, lacking in the magic power which every gem was supposed to possess. See Thorndike's History of Magic, 2.387-92 et passim (consult index).

346-350. Compare 1.897-903 and note.

351. "It is no joke."

355-357. Compare 3.274-80.

366. Doute of reson, reasonable fear, or uncertainty.

384. "Let your reserve be sweetened, modified, a little."

387. Felen, probe.

Troilus & Criseyde

392. Skeat cites Ovid, Art. Am. 2.107: "ut ameris, amabilis esto"; but Pandarus says that love for love is a reasonable reward.

393-396. Skeat cites Ovid, Art. Am. 2.113-14:

Forma bonum fragilest, quantumque accedit ad annos,
Fit minor et spatio carpitur ipsa suo;

but Chaucer is following Fil. 2.54:

pensa che vecchiezza,
O morte, torrà la tua bellezza.

398. Hazlitt (p. 501) cites a proverb: "Too late to grieve when the chance is past"; and (p. 193): "He is wise that is ware in time."

400-405. Wrinkles and gray hair are the nemesis of the proud beauty in Ovid, Art. Am. 2.117-18.

411-419. Compare 1.1022; 3.273.

424. Peynted proces, narrative or argument so colored as to conceal its real nature; see NED s.v. Painted, 2 b, and Process, sb., 4.

425. Criseyde again invokes Pallas in 5.977, 999.

435-436. Compare Tes. 1.58:

O fiero Marte, o dispettoso Iddio;

and Tes. 3.1:

Marte nella sua fredda regione
Colle sue furie insieme s'è tornato.

See note on 4.22-4.

465. Myn estat, i.e. my honor as a lady.

470. "Of two ills choose the least" (Hazlitt, 343). A widely current proverb; see Düringsfeld, 2. no. 752.

507-553. This episode, which Pandarus describes to Criseyde, has not been previously narrated. It is similarly recounted by Pandaro in Fil. 2.56-61.

513. Throwing darts or spears, either at a mark or in competition to see who could throw farthest, was a recognized medieval game; see Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, ed. Cox, pp. 62-3.

516. And I afer, And I afar off. In this line JR alone give what must be the correct reading. Fil. 2.57 reads: "Io non gli era vicin."

Notes to 2. 392-539

The reading of JR gains some support from H2Ph. The reading after does violence to the metre. It is hard to see why the MSS. should have bungled so simple a line. The confusion must already have been present in the original of the existing MSS.

522-539. This confession of sin, reported by Pandarus, is a striking illustration of the medieval convention which treats of courtly love in terms of the Christian religion. It is a confessio amantis. Troilus confesses that he has hitherto been a rebel to Love, and uses a phrase from the Confiteor. He addresses Love in language suggested by words which Boethius applies to the supreme God, and prays to be defended against the mortal sin of despair. (See following notes.) On a similar principle, Gower constructs his Confessio Amantis.

525. Mea culpa, mea culpa, mea maxima culpa is part of the Confiteor, the Catholic formula of confession.

526-528. God so disposes events that, in accordance with impartial providence, he guides the end of all men; i.e. destiny is controlled by divine providence. The thought of these lines is in accordance with the discussion of destiny and providence given by Boethius, 4. pr 6. See in particular lines 42-56 and 149-51: "The whiche god, whan he hath biholden from the heye tour of his purveaunce, he knoweth what is covenable to every wight, and leneth hem that he wot that is covenable to hem." In Chaucer the god is Love.

530-531. The sin of "wanhope," or despairing of the mercy of God, is a branch of Accidia, "which dampnable sinne, if that it continue unto his ende, it is cleped sinning in the holy gost"; see Parson's Tale, I 693-704. So the lover who despairs of mercy separates his soul from Love. Compare Gower, Conf. Am. 4.3389-712.

538-539. Gledes, embers; see NED s.v. Glead. Compare Ovid, Met. 4.64:

Quoque magis tegitur, tectus magis aestuat ignis, where Ovid is speaking of the secret love of Pyramus and Thisbe. Chaucer uses the line again in his Legend of Thisbe, 735-6:

As, wry the gleed, and hotter is the fyr;
Forbede a love, and it is ten so wood.

Le Roux de Lincy cites (1.71) a fifteenth century proverb: "Le teu plus couvert est le plus ardent." Compare Two Gentlemen of Verona 1.2.30.

Troilus & Criseyde

553. Compare Gower, Conf. Am. 6.143-5:

Wher as I moste daunce and singe
The hove dance and carolinge,
Or forto go the newefot.

554-574. With these lines, compare 1.547 ff.

584-585. "Wisdom added to beauty is like a ruby set in a ring." For the comparison of wisdom to rubies, see the A.V. of Job 28.18; Proverbs 3.15; 8.11; but in the Vulgate version of these passages the ruby is not specified. Chaucer is following Fil. 2.43:

Ben' è la gemma posta nell'anello,
Se tu se' savia come tu se' bella.

610-644. This episode of the triumphal ride of Troilus through the streets of Troy has no counterpart in Boccaccio, nor any close original in Benoit or Guido. Benoit, Troie 10201-18, describes Hector's entry into the city after the Second Battle, in which he is seriously wounded. All the people, including ladies and "dameiseles," go out to wonder at him, and acclaim him with loud cries. Compare also Troie 20609-27. (For neither passage is there a parallel in Guido.) In Troie 10609 Troilus is pointed out among the other chiefs, as they go out to the Third Battle, by the ladies seated in the embrasures of the windows.

In Fil. 2.82, Troilo and Pandaro together ride by Criseida's window. From this hint, Chaucer seems to have developed this episode and that of the second ride, 2.1247-81.

611. Ascry, clamor, outcry; see NED s.v. Ascry, sb. NED remarks: "In many places it is impossible to tell whether we ought to read ascrye or scrye" (the aphetic form). Note that H4GgH5Th prefix the definite article.

615. One is strongly tempted to adopt the reading latis for yates; but this reading is found only in the unreliable H2, and even the closely related Ph reads zatis. "Lattice" fits the context better than "gates," unless we may assume that the word gate was applied to a swinging window, an assumption for which I have found no authority. Nevertheless, I have preferred to abide by the all-but-unanimous evidence of the MSS. But see NED s.v. Lattice, 1.

Notes to 2. 553-671

617-618. There were six gates in the walls of Troy, of which one was called Dardanides, in honor of Dardanus, an ancient king of Troy. According to Benoit, Troie 3148, it was the second gate; according to Guido, Historia sig. c 1, b, col. 2, it was the first. By this gate the Trojans issued from the city for the Second Battle (Troie 7672; Historia sig. g 3, a, col. 2). This may suggest that it was from this battle that Troilus was returning (compare note to 2.610-44). In this battle he was in command of the second "conrei" (Troie 7749). Benoit describes the gate at length (Troie 7676-86), but says nothing of the barrier chain, which had obviously been opened to permit the egress of the troops (cf. Troie 7672), and left open for their return.

621. The day on which Troilus rode by Criseyde's window was one which was astrologically fortunate for him.

622-623. Compare Boethius, 5. pr 6.115-17: "And yif thou seyst heer, that thilke thing that god seeth to bityde, it ne may nat unbityde (as who seith, it mot bityde), and thilke thing that ne may nat unbityde it mot bityde by necessitee." See 4.1016-57. Le Roux de Lincy (2.259) quotes from the thirteenth century Roman de Siperis de Vigneaux:

Ce qui doit advenir on ne puet nullement
Destourner qu'il n'advienne, ce dit on bien souvent.

637. Compare Squire's Tale, F 558:

His maner was an heven for to see.

644. Compare 2.158 and note.

651. "Who has given me a love-potion?"

656. For pure ashamed, because completely filled with shame. A similar phrase, "For pure 'abaissht," occurs in Gower, Conf. Am. 4.1330. On this passage Macaulay comments: "the use of the past participle with 'for' in this manner occurs several times in Lydgate, e.g. 'for unknowe,' meaning 'from ignorance,' Temple of Glas, 632, 'for astonied,' 934, 1366, and so with an adjective, 'for pure wood' in the English Rom. of the Rose, 276."

670. ythe, O.E. geðēon, prosper. The form in the text is supported by CpH1J; the remaining MSS. give the simple form the.

671. Compare the proverb: "Every thing has a beginning"; "En toutes choses faut-il commencement" (Düringsfeld, 1. no. 102).

Troilus & Criseyde

677. A nine-syllable line, which various scribes have tried to regularize; see variant readings.

680-686. Venus is the most beneficent of the planets (hence "blisful"). She was well placed ("Disposed") in her "seventh house." The term "house" has two different astrological senses. It may mean the sign of the zodiac in which a given planet exerts its greatest influence. In this sense of the term, the sign Libra is the "house" of Venus. In "horary" astrology, however, a "house" denotes a one-twelfth section of the heavens, as seen from the point of observation. The whole sphere of the skies is cut in two equal portions by the circle of the horizon, half being above, half below. These hemispheres are again divided into half by a great circle, passing from the north to the south point of the horizon, and through the zenith. Each of these quarters is trisected by other great circles, passing through the north and south points of the horizon. The twelve "houses" so formed are numbered consecutively, beginning with the "house" immediately below the eastern horizon, and ending with the "house" immediately above the eastern horizon. The "seventhe hous of hevene" is, therefore, the portion of the heavens just above the western horizon. In the course of twenty-four hours, all the stars will pass through all twelve houses. For any question concerning love, the astrologer inquires what planets are at the moment in the seventh house, which "gives judgment of marriage and all manner of love-questions." A malefic planet—Saturn or Mars—in the seventh house causes ill fortune in love. But Venus is a benefic planet, and especially concerned with affairs of love. Venus in the seventh house marks a very propitious hour. At the time when Criseyde was making up her mind, Venus was in her seventh house, and was also "with aspectes payed," i.e. other planets stood in favorable aspects to her (see note on 3.715-17). Moreover, Venus, favorably placed at the present moment, had also been not entirely hostile ("not al a foo") to Troilus at his nativity. Compare with this passage 3.715-32 and notes.

691. "On what she would make up her mind at last"; see NED s.v. Appoint, 5.

700. The "auctour" whom Chaucer follows for Criseyde's cogitations is actually Boccaccio; see Fil. 2.69-78. But Chaucer uses his source with great freedom.

Notes to 2. 677-777

716-718. From Rose (Langlois) 5744-6:

Pour ce, se je defent ivrece,
Ne vueil je pas defendre a beivre.
Ce ne vaudrait un grain de peivre.

724-725. Boasting of favors received is a mortal sin against the law of Love; compare Gower, Conf. Am. 1.2399-680. See also Parson's Tale, I 393.

734-735. The alpha text of these lines (see variant readings) is nearer than Chaucer's later text to Fil. 2.70:

Io non conosco in questa terra ancora
Veruna senza amante . . .
E come gli altri far non è peccato,
E non può esser da alcun biasimato.

741. See variant readings. It is plain that this line was confused in the original of all existing MSS. It is impossible to determine which word-order Chaucer intended.

752. "Untied in a pleasant pasture"; see NED s.v. Lease, sb. 1, and compare Fame 1768.

754. "Checkmate" completely ends the activities of the king in chess. Compare Rose (Langlois) 6652: "Eschec e mat li ala dire," where, however, the context is entirely different. See also Rutebeuf, Le Miracle de Théophile 6-8, and Duchess 659-60.

756. Compare Squire's Tale, F 619.

759. "I am not a 'religious,'" a member of a monastic order, and so under vows of celibacy.

767-769. Oversprat is a syncopated present, and overspradde the preterite, of overspread (see NED s.v. Spread, vb.), from O.E. ofer + sprædan. For the change of vowel, see Ten Brink, ¶ 50.

777. I retain the reading wey, which has overwhelming MS. attestation. It was clearly the reading of  $\gamma$ ; so that the reading of A must be regarded as a scribal emendation. H2 has introduced a clumsy alteration of the line; but the closely related Ph reads wey. The impossible reading wex of J seems to be a corruption of wey. The reading why of Gg was, no doubt, present in the common ancestor of GgH5, H5 having substituted the gloss cause. Both Skeat and Globe read why; and it is possible that Chaucer so wrote the line. But it is clear that wey stood in the original of all surviving MSS. Wey in the sense of "way" does not seem idiomatic English. Why in the sense of "cause" fits the context; though it is an unusual use of the interrogative pronoun. It is possible that wey is a dialectal variant of wo (see Bradley-Stratmann, M.E. Dict., s.v. Wā); but, if so, it can only be as an interjection (cf. weylawey, 3.1695), for the noun in Chaucer is regularly wo, as in lines 783-4 below. Perhaps the passage may be glossed: "that she does not have to say 'alas!' in her complaining" (see NED s.v. Complain, 1, b).

784. "Our punishment is that we must drink our own cup of sorrow." Compare Rose (Langlois) 11535:

Teus genz beivent trop de mesaise.

791. S1 has marginal gloss: "Acriores in principi[o] franguntur in fine." I have not been able to trace this sentence, which seems to be a proverb. Wander (Deutsches Sprichwörter Lexicon, s.v. Anfang) records proverbs of similar tenor; see nos. 32, 33, 48, 71. No. 22 reads: "Non sibi concordem spondent exordia finem."

792-793. For examples of "tresoun that to wommen hath ben do," see the Legend of Good Women.

797. "No man stumbles against it," i.e. it does not lie in the public way; see NED s.v. Spurn, vb. 1.

798. "Ex nihilo nihil fit" (Hazlitt, 144).

802-803. "Yet all things that people do to please their friends seem to these persons harmful."

804-805. Compare 5.1062 and note.

806. This line resumes the metaphor of 764-9 above.

807-808. "Nought venture, nought have" (Hazlitt, 340). A proverb of wide currency; see Düringsfeld, 2. no. 574. Compare Usk, Testament of Love 1.5.86. The same proverb appears in 5.784 in slightly different phrasing.

813-814. At the house of Deiphebus, also, one goes down stairs to the garden; see 2.1705.

816. Criseyde's three nieces are a creation of Chaucer. The name Antigone is taken over from the tale of Thebes; Tharbe and Flexippe seem to be names of Chaucer's invention. (I cannot accept the explanation of these names given by Hamilton, pp. 94-6.) None of the names occurs in Benoit.

825. Note the reading lay for songe found in aJRH4.

827-875. As Kittredge pointed out (Mod. Lang. Notes 25.158), Antigone's song bears a general resemblance to Guillaume de Machaut's Paradis d'Amour (Poésies Lyriques, ed. Chichmaref, 2.345-51). There, as here, a lady sings her gratitude to Love for having so well bestowed her affections, and praises the power of Love, who is the source of all virtues and the enemy of vice. There are, however, no close verbal parallels; one must read Machaut's lay in its entirety to recognize the similarity. Young (pp. 174-5) points out a series of very slight resemblances between Antigone's song and Fil. 3.83-5; see note on 2.848-50.

841-847. Compare Complaint of Venus 1-24.

843. Apollo is god of intellectual illumination. Stoon of sikernesse, unmovable rock of security; see NED s.v. Stone, 3 b. It is difficult to decide on the basis of the MS. evidence whether Chaucer wrote sikernesse or secrenesse; see variant readings. Secrecy is a prime virtue of courtly love (compare Lydgate, Temple of Glas, 294-5: "mirroure eke was she Of secrenes"); but "stone of secrecy" seems an unnatural figure, unless, perhaps, Chaucer is thinking of some stone of magic virtue. For sikernesse compare Complaint of Venus 21, and 3.982.

848-850. These lines bear a slight resemblance to Fil. 3.83-5. Boccaccio's stanzas are in a song of Troilo in praise of love, the earlier part of which Chaucer has used for the Proem to Book III.

861. Hazlitt (p. 311) records the proverb: "Many talk of Robin Hood that never shot in his bow." Chaucer transfers the bow to Cupid; but the early scribes recognized the proverb. H4 reads: "Thei spekyn of robynhod but thei bente never his bowe"; and Ph has marginal gloss in a contemporary hand: "of Robyn hood."

866. "He deserves no good that cannot suffer sorrow"; compare 4.1584 and note.

867-868. "The man who has a head of glass should beware of throwing stones, when he goes to war." A variant of the familiar modern proverb: "Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones"; see Düringsfeld, 1. no. 600. Closest to Chaucer are the Italian variants cited by Düringsfeld: "Chi ha testa di vetro, non faccia a' sassi," and "Chi ha cervelliera (helmet) di vetro, non vada a battaglia di sassi."

884. Sike is an imperfect rhyme for endite and white. Skeat, in his notes, suggests as a conjectural emendation site, sorrow; see

Troilus & Criseyde

NED s.v. Site, vb. 1 and sb. 1; but site is apparently confined to dialects more northern than Chaucer's. It represents O.N. sýta.

904-905. Compare Franklin's Tale, F 1017-18:

For thorisonte hath reft the sonne his light;
This is as muche to seye as it was night.

920. Compare Knight's Tale, A 1509:

And loude he song ageyn the sonne shene.

Birds ordinarily sing "agayn the sonne shene" (Squire's Tale, F 53-5), i.e. opposite to, in full view of the sun; but the nightingale sings "against" the moon.

925-931. Criseyde's dream is not found in Boccaccio. Compare, however, Fil. 7.23-4. For the eagle as type of a royal lover, compare Parliament of Fowls.

954. Don thyn hood. The injunction must be metaphorical, since hoods were not ordinarily worn in the house. Only Sir Thopas was wont to "liggen in his hode" (B 2101). The whole line seems to mean: "Put on your hat (and go away); your business is attended to."

955. This line refers back to 952 above.

959. "Unless lack of pursuit, growing out of sloth, cause it (to turn out otherwise)."

964. "At any rate one foot of your sorrow has been maimed"; see NED s.v. Hamble.

967-973. This stanza follows closely Fil. 2.80. Boccaccio's lines, as Rossetti pointed out, are taken almost verbatim from Dante, Inf. 2.127-32.

1001. "Your evil faring is not chargeable to me"; see NED s.v. Along, adj. 1.

1017. The metrical stress, and so the logical emphasis, is on me.

1022. When one is being talked about, one's ears "burn" or "glow"; see quotations in NED s.v. Glow, vb. 1, 5.

1023-1025. Ovid, Art. Am. 1.455-68, advises the lover to write to his lady with caressing words. He should not address her as he would address the Senate, or a grave judge;

Sed lateant vires, nec sis in fronte disertus.

Effugiant voces verba molesta tuae!

Quis, nisi mentis inops, tenerae declamat amicae?

Note variant readings to line 1024.

Notes to 2. 904-1092

1026. "Do not write with the hand of a professional scrivener."

1027. Compare Ovid, Her. 3.3.:

Quascumque adspicies, lacrimae fecere lituras;

and Propertius, 5.3.3-4:

Siqua tamen tibi lecturo pars oblita derit,

Haec erit e lacrimis facta litura meis.

1030-1036. Compare Horace, Art. Poet. 355-6:

ut citharoedus

Ridetur, chorda qui semper oberrat eadem;

and the proverbial phrase to "harp upon one string" (Hazlitt, 475).

1037-1043. Compare Horace, Art. Poet. 1-5:

Humano capiti cervicem pictor equinam

Iungere si velit et varias inducere plumas

Undique collatis membris, ut turpiter atrum

Desinat in piscem mulier formosa superne:

Spectatum admissi risum teneatis, amici?

Pyk is the fish, pike.

1062. Minerva, the goddess of wisdom. Her name must be read with stress on first and last syllables.

1065-1085. Chaucer condenses into three stanzas of indirect discourse the letter given in full by Boccaccio, Fil. 2.96-106.

1077. Leigh represents O.E. lēah, pret. of lēogan, to lie. The conventions of love still demand that the lover shall think of himself as of little worth; Chaucer thought such protestations no better than lies.

1083-1085. Note variant readings. We have here a clear case of revision. The omission of 1083 by H2Ph points to a confused reading in the original of their common ancestor. In the same line, JR present a conflation of the reading of GgH5H4 and that of γ. In 1085, J leaves RH4 and gives the γ reading.

1091-1092. From Fil. 2.107:

Lettera mia, dicendo, tu sarai

Beata, in man di tal donna verrai.

Compare Fil. 9.5.

Troilus & Criseyde

1093-1095. These lines show clear evidence of revision; see variant readings.

1099. Compare Gower's account of "love-drunkenness," "which cleped is the jolif wo," Conf. Am. 6.84.

1106-1107. Compare 1.517-18 and note.

1109-1110. "See that you always make a joke of me." Compare Cant. Tales, B 1630:

The monk putte in the mannes hood an ape.

A man's face occupies his hood. To "find a joke" in his hood, or to "put an ape" in his hood, is to make him ridiculous. See NED s.v. Ape, sb., 4.

1119. An irregular line. Skeat, without authority, reads speke (pret. subj.). See variant readings.

1163. When Pandarus arrived at Criseyde's house, it was "past prime" (2.1095), i.e. past 9 a.m. Dinner would be eaten about ten or eleven (cf. 2.1557-60, and Shipman's Tale, B 1395-443). When dinner is finished (2.1185), it is "after noon."

1177-1178. The subject of avysed and fond is not expressed. It is understood from the preceding stanza.

1197. "Does he know anything about writing letters?"

1201. To medes, as a reward; see NED s.v. Meed, 1 c. As a reward for writing the letter, Pandarus promises to undertake the task of sewing together the leaves on which it was written. Skeat quotes Tyrwhitt, s.v. Sowe: "it was usual, and indeed necessary, formerly to sew letters, when they were written upon parchment; but the practice continued long after the invention of paper."

1219-1225. Boccaccio gives the letter at length, Fil. 2.121-7. The Italian Criseida says nothing in her letter of any sisterly relation; but, a little later (2.134), she says to Pandaro:

Come fratel per la sua gran bontade

1229. "Upon a cushion embroidered with gold thread"; see NED s.v. Beaten, 5 c, and compare Knight's Tale, A 979. See also note by O. F. Emerson in Philological Quarterly 2.85-9 (1923).

1238-1239. H4 has marginal gloss: "levis impressio levis recessio." The rhymed form of the phrase marks it as probably proverbial; and Chaucer's "men seith" points to the same conclusion. I have not been able to identify the proverb. Hazlitt (p.

Notes to 2. 1093-1335

388) records a proverb: "Soon learnt, soon forgotten." In 1238, Skeat reads impressiounes for the sake of the metre; but the MSS. all read impressiouns.

1247-1281. This episode, in which Troilus again passes under Criseyde's window, is not in Boccaccio; but see note to 2.610-44.

1249. "Together with his company of ten." For this use of the pronoun some preceded by a numeral, see NED s.v. Some, 3 and -some, suffix 2, and s.v. Thirdsome. The numeral is sometimes, as here, an ordinal, sometimes a cardinal, as in the modern Scottish foursome, threesome, etc. Note that GgH4A read tensum and H2Ph x. somme; D substitutes twelve some. It is not clear whether Troilus was one of the ten, or whether there were ten followers, with Troilus as an eleventh. In the passages cited by NED, the same doubt exists. The preposition with seems to suggest that Troilus rode with ten followers. Skeat leans to the other interpretation.

1272-1273. Compare 3.1104-5, where the same figure is used, and see NED s.v. Thorn, 2.

1274. "God grant that other ladies may similarly be pierced by thorns of love which they cannot pick out!" It is possible that mo should be construed with swich thornes; but the context suggests rather that mo is indirect object, and swich thornes direct object, of sende. For mo pronominally used in the meaning "others," see 1.613; 3.1514; 4.1125.

1276. Compare Melibeus, B 2226: "Whyl that iren is hoot. men sholden smyte." "Strike while the iron is hot" is a proverb of widest currency; see Düringsfeld, 1. no. 405.

1289. "But on that score there was much occasion for labor and activity."

1290. For alle thing, see note to 3.696.

1291. "And why do you ask me to speak with him?" The reading for shame (see variant readings) is a corruption of the  $\gamma$  original.

1309. A nine-syllable line, which the scribes have tried to emend; see variant readings.

1312. Compare 2.74 and note.

1335. Spir, young shoot or sprout; see NED s.v. Spire, 3. Compare Alanus de Insulis, Liber Parabolarum, ed. Migne, col. 583 A:

De nuce fit corylus: de glande fit ardua quercus.

Troilus & Criseyde

Compare also Usk, Testament of Love 3.5.3-7.

1343. Refreyde, grow cold; compare 5.507, and Rosemounde 21.

1347. For the cast of dice as a metaphor of the vicissitudes of Fortune, see Knight's Tale, A 1238; Monk's Tale, B 3851; Gower, Mirour, 22102-3, 23399. Dice were actually used as a method of divination to foretell success in love; see Cicero, De Divinatione 1.13.23; 2.21.48; 2.59.121, and Macaulay's note on Gower, Conf. Am. 4.2792. Compare also 4.1098.

1349. Gistes. Skeat and Globe print gestes; and Skeat glosses the phrase: "according to his deeds or adventures." But a reference to the martial exploits of Troilus is not in place; and the evidence of the MSS. points strongly to gistes as the correct reading, though this form is found only in JCl. Gistes best explains the other variants. Moreover, there is no reason why the scribes should have stumbled over so familiar a word as gestes. I interpret gistes as meaning "casts" (of dice), with reference to line 1347. Gist is the regular Old French development of Latin jactus, and jactus is commonly used for "throw" of the dice (see Ovid, Art. Am. 3.353, and the passages from Cicero cited in note to line 1347). The word is used in O.F. with a variety of specialized meanings (see Godefroy, s.v. Giet); but I have found no instance in which it is used of dice, nor have I found the word in English. (NED enters three nouns, gist; but none of them is identical with that which I assume.)

1369. Leyser, opportunity; see NED s.v. Leisure, 1.

1380-1383. Imitated by Usk, Testament of Love 3.7.99-101: "so ofte must men on the oke smyte, til the happy dent have entred, whiche with the okes owne swaye maketh it to come al at ones." Hazlitt (p. 19) cites the proverb: "A great tree hath a great fall." Erasmus, Adagia 1.8.94, cites the phrase: "Multis ictibus dejicitur quercus," as applicable "de re factu quidem ardua, quae tamen assidua industria pervincatur."

1390. Forbise, furnish with examples. The correct form of the word should be forbisne, or forbysne, from the noun forbysen, example; see NED s.v. Forbysen.

1398. According to Benoit, Troie 2939, Deiphebus is the third in age of the five sons of Priam and Hecuba. In the French, the name is metrically four syllables, with stress on the second and fourth. Chaucer consistently treats it as trisyllabic, with stress sometimes on the second syllable, sometimes (2.1542, 1558, 1569, 1611, 1641, 1675) on first and last. For the affectionate relations existing between Troilo and Deifebo, see Fil. 7.78-85, a passage not otherwise utilized by Chaucer, which may have given the hint for the episode at the house of Deiphebus; compare Introduction, p. xxix.

Notes to 2. 1343-1557

1413-1414. "I have never been, and never hereafter expect to be, against a thing where my opposition might be displeasing to thee."

1427. "With spur and riding whip," i.e. "I will use every means to advance her cause"; see NED s.v. Yard, sb. 2, 3.

1443-1444. "Deiphebus, who by his nature was disposed to agree to all honor and goodness."

1450-1454. Compare 1.110-23; 4.176-82.

1462. "Found her just rising from the dinner table." The rhyme requires that arise be infinitive (with long vowel) rather than past participle (with short vowel).

1467. Chaucer seems to have invented the name of Poliphete, together with the episode of his supposed legal proceedings against Criseyde. Benoit has two personages named Polibetes; but they are both Greeks (see Table des Noms Propres in the ed. of Constans). According to Criseyde (2.1474), the "false Poliphete" can count on the friendship of Antenor and Aeneas, both of whom ultimately betrayed the city of Troy. (Compare 4.203-5 and note.) Hamilton (p. 97, n. 3) suggests that Chaucer had in mind the "Cererique sacrum Polyphoeten" of Aen. 6.484, "who as a Trojan priest could very properly take steps against the daughter of the renegade Calchas."

1495. Worde and ende, beginning and end; compare Monk's Tale, B 3911.

1503. Compare Luke 8.48: "Fides tua salvam te fecit"; and the almost identical phrase in Luke 18.42.

1534-1535. A metaphor from the sport of deer-hunting. The triste is the station taken by the hunter, armed with a bow (see NED s.v. Trist, sb. 2, and Tristre). Past this station the deer is driven by the trackers. This is the method of the deer-hunt in Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, 1146-77.

1557. Dinner is at 10 a.m.; compare note to 5.1126.

Troilus & Criseyde

1564-1566. Compare Rose (Michel) 19230-3:

Por ce les vueil ci trespasser,
Ne si ne vueil or pas lasser
Moi de parler, ne vous d'oïr;
Bon fait prolixite foïr.

Compare also Squire's Tale, F 401-8.

1580. Compare 2.1314-15. For the use of charms and incantations in the medical practice of the Middle Ages, see Thorndike, History of Magic, 2.482-3, 498, 851-2, 858.

1610. Compare 5.651.

1617. Heynous is apparently a trisyllable; compare O.F. haïneus.

1638. "I have brought thy bier." Pandarus seems to be rallying Troilus on his feigned illness.

1644. I adopt the spelling Criseyda of CpClH1D, since the word is here accented on the first and third syllables; compare 1.169.

1661. "Which he would feel no obligation to do for you."

1705. Compare 2.813-14.

1732. And inward thus. "And as he came into the room where Troilus lay, he said thus to Criseyde." Possibly the words ful softly should be taken as part of the narrative rather than of the speech. If it were possible to regard bygynne as a preterite, the whole line might be taken as a stage-direction.

1733. Defende, forbid; see NED s.v. Defend, 3.

1734. "In the name of Him who sent us all our souls." Sende, a dialectal variant of sente, is used by Chaucer in Rose 1158 and Reeve's Tale, A 4136—in both instances, as here, under the rhyme. This form of the preterite, with voiced instead of breathed explosive, is listed in NED s.v. Send, vb. 1.

1735. I can offer no satisfactory explanation of this line. Bell suggested that the crowns were those of Priam and Hecuba, Troilus's royal parents. Skeat was inclined to see an allusion to the two crowns, of roses and of lilies, brought by an angel to St. Cecilia and her husband (Second Nun's Tale). Lowes has shown (P.M.L.A. 26.315-23; 29.129-33) that the crown of roses symbolizes martyrdom, and the crown of lilies virginity. In view of this, Skeat's conjecture is of no more value than is Bell's. Interpretation of the line is rendered more difficult by uncertainty as to the meaning of the words, "in the virtue of." Is Pandarus invoking a moral virtue adorned by two crowns? Or does the line mean "by the power of two crowns"? If one accepts the reading in the vertue of, the first of these meanings seems more probable. (But note that JGgH5H4 omit the, and that R presents a bungling emendation.) On this assumption, I suspect that the virtue invoked is that of pity. In Complaint unto Pity 58, it is called "coroune of vertues alle," and in lines 71-7 Pity is "annexed ever unto Bountee," and is "also the coroune of Beautee." In Merchant of Venice, 4.1.184-9, the quality of mercy "becomes the throned monarch better than his crown," and is "twice blessed." Such an interpretation gains probability from the context of the unique stanza, found in R and printed in the variants (see note to 2.1750), where cruelty is said to be incompatible with Bounty and Beauty. This unique stanza apparently was intended to follow immediately line 1736, and may have been written with the purpose of clarifying the passage. On the other assumption, that the line means "by the power of two crowns," it is possible that the crowns symbolize Justice and Mercy. In support of this suggestion, which fits the context as well as the other, see Chaucer's A.B.C., 137-44. Since the Blessed Virgin received from her Son the crown of mercy, while He retained for Himself the crown of justice, it may be that Pandarus, who in the preceding line has invoked "Him who sent us all our souls," is here indirectly invoking Christ and the Blessed Virgin. But Chaucer is not elsewhere in the poem guilty of so glaring an anachronism.

1745. "People surmise at the slightest move." "Wagging of a straw" is a proverbial phrase; for illustrations see NED s.v. Wagging, b.

1750 (var.). Immediately after line 1750 R reads:

Compleined ek heleyne of his siknes
And feithfully/that pitee was to heere;

and in the margin of these lines a contemporary hand, possibly that of the scribe, has written the word Vacat. After these two lines is found the unique stanza, first discovered by Sir William McCormick (Furnivall Miscellany, 296-300), which is printed in the variant readings. The two lines are a repetition of 2.1576-7.

Troilus & Criseyde

and have no possible connection with the context, nor with the unique stanza.

The stanza has every appearance of being genuine. Both grammatically and metrically it accords with Chaucer's usage, if we assume in the first line a scribal omission of some such word as now—and such omissions are frequent in the text of R. The manner of the lines is distinctly Chaucerian. The idea expressed—that cruelty is incompatible with beauty and bounty—is a commonplace of courtly love poetry, found also in Chaucer's Complaint unto Pity (see especially lines 64-77), and in 2.330-50 above. The substance of the stanza might appropriately be spoken by Pandarus to Criseyde. Its proper position, however, would seem to be after stanza 248 rather than after 250, where it is found in R. Stanza 248 contains an appeal to Criseyde not to cause her lover's death; and the unique stanza warns against the sin of cruelty. The stanza might also belong earlier in Book II, after stanza 49; but one cannot see why it should have strayed so far from its intended context.

It would look as though the stanza, which has no counterpart in Filostrato, was an afterthought of Chaucer, written to continue the idea of stanza 248. It may well have been written on a discarded piece of paper or parchment, at the top of which had already been written the first two lines of stanza 226. These lines he did not take the trouble to erase; nor did he indicate clearly enough the precise position of the new stanza. The copyist found this loose sheet between the leaves of his exemplar, and incorporated it bodily at the place where it appears in R. Some one, perhaps the scribe of R, troubled by the two floating lines, wrote Vacat beside them, by way of calling attention to an incomplete stanza.

1752. Kankedort, a word of unknown origin and meaning. It seems to appear, in a corrupted form, in Henry Medwall's Nature (circa 1486-1500), Tudor Facsimile Text reproduction of Brit. Mus. copy, fol. e, 1, recto:

One thyng I am certayne
He wyll no lengar me support
And that were a shrewd crank dort
Therfore yt ys best that I resort
To my maysters presence.

Note to 2.1752

With the form crank dort compare the reading kanker dort(e) of H2PhH4Cx. From the context here, and in Medway, the meaning seems to be "an unpleasant situation." No other instance of the word is known. For some not very profitable guesses at the etymology of the word, see Skeat's note on the passage.

NOTES TO BOOK THREE

NOTES TO BOOK THREE

1-38. These lines follow closely Fil. 3.74-9. Boccaccio's stanzas, which owe their suggestion to Boethius, 2. m 8, form the beginning of a song sung by Troilo after he has won the full love of Criseida. See note on 3.1744-71. In this passage, Venus is addressed sometimes as the pagan goddess, sometimes as the planet with astrological influence. She is the power of Love, both in its earthly aspect as sexual attraction, and in its Platonic aspect as the unifying principle of the universe.

1-2. From Fil. 3.74:

O luce eterna, il cui lieto splendore
Fa bello il terzo ciel.

The old astronomy assigned to each of the seven planets a sphere, or heaven, in the following order outwards from the Earth: Moon, Mercury, Venus, Sun, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn. The planet Venus, therefore, adorns the third heaven. Compare Dante, Par. 8.1-3.

3. From Fil. 3.74:

Del sole amica, e figliuola di Giove.

Venus is the friend of the Sun astronomically, because she accompanies him through the heavens, sometimes as morning star, sometimes as evening star; compare Dante, Par. 8.12. Her greatest possible distance from the Sun is 45 degrees. Venus is mythologically the daughter of Jove; compare 3.718.

5. From Fil. 3.74:

Benigna donna d'ogni gentil core.

Compare Dante, Inf. 5.100:

Amor, che al cor gentil ratto s' apprende.

Courtly love was exclusively appropriated to those of gentle birth.

6. Boccaccio says, Fil. 3.74:

Certa cagion del valor che mi muove.

Troilus & Criseyde

Chaucer's line is more general. Venus, as a benefic planet, causes health and gladness.

8-14. Compare 3.1744-50, and note to 3.1744-71.

9. I adopt the reading wel, given by CpAH5CxTh (note that Gg and R lack this passage), instead of wol, which has better MS. authority, since wel is supported by the Italian source. The Moutier ed. of Fil. 3.75 reads: "s' io il ver discerno"; but the Paris ed. of the same passage (there numbered 4.68) reads: "se il vero ben discerno."

11. "Feel thee at seasons with an eternal emanation." From Fil. 3.75:

con eterno

Vapor ti senton nel tempo piacente.

Compare Wisdom 7.25: "[Sapientia] vapor est enim virtutis Dei, et emanatio quaedam est claritatis omnipotentis Dei sincera"; and see Dante, Purg. 11.6.

15-17. From Fil. 3.76:

Tu Giove prima agli alti effetti lieto,
Pe' qua' vivono e son tutte le cose,
Movesti, o bella donna.

These lines contain a curious blending of the cult of Love and of Christian theology. In the divine work of creation, the giving of life is operated through the Holy Spirit, designated in the Nicene Creed as "dominum et vivificantem," and the Holy Spirit impersonates the Love of God. Compare Thomas Aquinas, Summa, Pars I, Qu. 45, Art. 6: "Unde et Deus. Pater operatus est creaturam per suum Verbum, quod est Filius; et per suum amorem, qui est Spiritus Sanctus. . . . Sed Spiritui Sancto . . . attribuitur quod dominando gubernet et vivificet quae sunt creata a Patre per Filium."

17. That comeveden is the correct reading, is shown by the Italian movesti (Fil. 3.76). The scribes found the word a stumbling block. See NED s.v. Commove. I retain the pronoun hem, since it is found in all MSS. It is probably, however, a corruption introduced by "Adam scriveyn." The context demands hym (i.e. Jove) and the Italian reads, Fil. 3.76:

e mansueto

Sovente il rendi all'opere noiose
Di noi mortali.

Notes to 3. 8-33

20-21. From Fil. 3.76:

E in mille forme quaggiù il mandasti
Quand' ora d' una ed or d' altra il pregasti.

(The Paris ed. reads piagasti, i.e. woundest.) Jove assumed the form of a swan in his pursuit of Leda, of a bull with Europa, of a golden shower with Danaë, of Amphitryon to win the love of Alcmena.

22-28. This stanza follows closely Fil. 3.77. For the idea of love as the school of courtesy and all the virtues, compare 3.1786-806.

22. From Fil. 3.77:

Tu'l fiero Marte al tuo piacer benegno
Ed umil rendi, e cacci ciascun' ira.

Philosophically, Love, as the spirit of unity (cf. 3.29), appeases the wrath of War; astrologically, Venus, as a benefic planet, mitigates the malefic influence of Mars (see Complaint of Mars 36-42); mythologically, Mars became the lover of the goddess Venus (cf. 3.725).

29-30. From Fil. 3.78:

Tu in unità le case e le cittadi,
Li regni, e le provincie, e'l mondo tutto
Tien, bella donna.

Compare Boethius 2. m 8:

Hic sancto populos quoque
Iunctos foedere continet.

31-34. From Fil. 3.78:

Tu sola le nascose qualitati
Delle cose conosci, onde'l costrutto
Vi metti tal, che fai maravigliare
Chi tua potenza non sa riguardare.

The Paris ed. (4.71) reads:

Delle cose viventi, e lor costrutto
Rischiarì in modo a far maravigliare.

Chaucer has made the reference of his lines more specific; Love knows why she loves him, or he loves her.

33. Io. Th reads go and Cx geo; but all the MSS. have Io or

Troilus & Criseyde

100. Skeat suggested that jo represents O.F. joer, to play, hence to play a game, to make a move; but no other instance of the word is known in English. One is tempted to connect it with gee, in current colloquial use in America in the sense of "fit, suit, agree"; see NED s.v. Gee, vb., of doubtful etymology, of which illustrations are cited from the early eighteenth century.

35. "Why this fish, and not that, comes into the weir, where it can be caught." Compare the proverbial phrase: "There are as good fish in the sea as ever were caught," currently applied to the selection of a mate.

36-38. From Fil. 3.79.

39-49. In these lines, Chaucer leaves Filostrato and follows his own invention.

40-41. Compare 1.15.

43. Compare 2.13.

44. Inkielde, pour in; see NED s.v. Hield.

45. Calliope is the Muse of epic poetry. In 2.8, Chaucer invokes Clio, the Muse of history, as the guide of his second book, where he asserts "That of no sentement I this endite" (2.13). Here he seems to imply, he is rising to a higher level of composition. So Dante, at the beginning of the Purgatorio (1.7-9), says:

Ma qui la morta poesì risurga,
O sante Muse, poiché vostro sono,
E qui Calliopè alquanto surga.

58. The reading of R, and often sore sike, since partially supported by JCx (see variant readings), may be an authentic  $\beta$  revision; but the evidence of the  $\beta$  MSS. is so confused that I have not adopted this reading into the text.

59. Lappe, a flap of her garment; see NED s.v. Lap, sb. 1, 1, and compare 2.448.

80. The reading hir for it, given by JRCx, may be an authentic  $\beta$  reading; but H4 reads it.

81. Compare Legend 1817:

Men mighte smyten of her arm or heed;
and 3.957.

87. Made it tough, was annoyingly persistent; see NED s.v. Tough, 8 b, and compare 5.101.

Notes to 3. 35-203

88. "To sing a fool a mass" seems to be a proverbial expression; but I am unable to explain it. (There seems to be no connection with the ecclesiastical "Feast of Fools," though in some instances a Mass seems to have been sung as part of the Saturnalia; see Chambers, Med. Stage 1.287.)

91. So far as we know, Chaucer is in this episode entirely independent of "bokes olde."

110. The reading herte for wreththe (see variant readings) seems to be a  $\gamma$  error, accidentally shared by H2 (the closely related Ph reads wrath), and by Cx. Herte looks like a scribal repetition from 109; however, the phrase "hys herte apese" is found in 3.887. See NED s.v. Appease, 2 and 3.

115. Compare Squire's Tale, F 496:

That other weep, as she to water wolde.

120. I is an exclamation; note that H5Cx write ey.

137-138. "Under the whip of your punishment, in proportion to my offence, even the punishment of death, if I break your prohibition." See NED s.v. Yard, sb. 2, 3 and Shipman's Tale, B 1287.

144. A slightly irregular line; and ben ay constitutes the second foot. Globe, following H2PhH3Cx, omits ay; Skeat, without warrant, reads lyke ay.

145. Talent, inclination; see NED s.v. Talent, 2.

150. I interpret "Natal Joves feste" as meaning Jove's natal feast, i.e. the festival of Jove's birth. Pandarus is then invoking the pagan equivalent of Christmas. (Skeat's citation of Horace, Ep. 2.2.187 does not seem apposite.)

188-189. Compare the ballad of Hugh of Lincoln, Version A, stanza 17 (Child, 3.244):

And a' the bells o merry Lincoln
Without men's hands were rung,
And a' the books o merry Lincoln
Were read without man's tongue.

192. The letter is that referred to in 2.1697-708.

193-194. And oon, and two, both of you.

198. Bere the belle, take the lead, like the bell-wether of the flock. A proverbial phrase; see NED s.v. Bell, sb. 1, 7.

203. As I the deuyse, as I recount to thee. The MS attestation of this line is greatly confused; see variant readings. I adopt the reading of R, supported by H4 (where thei seems to be a transposition of I the). This reading, with yow for the, is also supported by  $\gamma H3S1$ .

Troilus & Criseyde

239-287. These stanzas follow closely Fil. 3.5-10.

241. To-yere, this year; see NED s.v. Toyear. Chaucer's phrase translates Boccaccio's uguanno, Fil. 3.5. This is an important indication of time. Criseyde accepts Troilus as her lover before the end of the year in which the story begins; compare 3.360, and see Intro., p. xxxiv.

273. Compare 2.411-19.

282. I adopt the  $\beta$  reading, attested by JH4RCx, although this reading is also found in H2Ph. Possibly the reading of  $\gamma H3S1 + GgH5$  may represent a revision which was later cancelled. It seems distinctly less apt for the context than the reading of  $\beta + H2Ph$ . Compare note on 3.303.

292-294. S2Dig have marginal gloss: "Cato." The reference is to Book I, Distich 3, of Dionysius Cato, a work of wide popularity:

Virtutem primam esse puto conpescere linguam;
Proximus ille deo est, qui scit ratione tacere.

Compare Rose (Langlois) 7055-7:

La peuz en escrit trouver tu
Que la prumeraine vertu
C'est de metre a sa langue frein.

(The idea is repeated in Rose (Langlois) 12179-83.) Chaucer uses the distich again in Manciple's Tale, H 332-3:

The firste vertu, sone, if thou wolt lere
Is to restreyne and kepe wel thy tonge.

In his note on that passage, Skeat cites Albertano of Brescia, De Arte Loquendi et Tacendi, (p. xcvi), where the distich of Cato is quoted.

Note variant reading in line 293.

299-300. For a list of such proverbs, see Manciple's Tale, H 314-62.

302-303. In 303,  $\gamma H3S1Th + GgH5$  read Hastow made many a lady. This seems to be a  $\gamma$  error, shared by  $GgH5$  (compare note to 3.282). The error arose from the supposition that O tonge is a vocative. O is rather to be interpreted as the numeral one (note that H4Cx read For tonge). O tonge is thus the subject of hath.

Notes to 3. 239-360

308. "In the nature of things, no boaster is to be believed."

309. Hazlitt (p. 4) cites a proverb: "A boaster and a liar are cousin-germans"; and Le Roux de Lincy (2.282): "De grans vanteurs petits faiseurs."

329. "For wise men are chastised, and learn, by watching the harm that comes to a fool." Compare Rose (Langlois) 8003-4:

Mout a beneüree vie
On qui par autrui se chastie.

Langlois, in his note on the passage, cites Plautus, Mercator 4.4.40: "Feliciter sapit qui alieno periculo sapit." There is a Latin proverb cited by Erasmus, Adagia 2.3.39: "Felix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum." Compare 1.203, 630, 635. See also Nigellus Wirekus, Speculum Stultorum, in Wright's Anglo-Latin Satirical Poems, Rolls Series, Vol. 1, p. 145.

340. "To draw up the substance of her grant in a legal document."

349. From Fil. 3.11:

I sospir ch' egli aveva a gran dovizia.

Richesse is a literal translation of dovizia.

351-354. From Fil. 3.12. Compare also 2.50-5, and Rose (Langlois) 47-54:

Qu'en mai estoie, ce sonjoie,
Ou tens amoureux, plein de joie,
Ou tens, ou toute rien s'esgaie,
Que l'en ne voit boisson ne haie
Qui en mai parer ne se vueille
E covrir de nouvelle fueille.
Li bois recuevrent lor verdure,
Qui sont sec tant come ivers dure.

352. Dreye, though found only in Cls1, is clearly demanded by the rhyme; compare 4.1173, and see Wild, p. 176. The other MSS. read drye.

360. Compare 3.241 and note.

Troilus & Criseyde

371. Man seems to be an authentic  $\beta$  reading, though H4 here joins the other authorities in reading wight.

374-375. Troilus, in the end, actually meets his death at the hands of Achilles, who cuts off his head and drags his dead body at the tail of his horse; see Benoit, Troie 21440-50. In the corresponding passage of Filostrato (3.15), Troilo says:

E s'io non venga nelle man del duro Agamennon.

Chaucer transfers the reference to Agamemnon to the following stanza.

379. I adopt the reading But of H4RCxS1 as an authentic  $\beta$  reading, despite the fact that J reads That with the other authorities. If one reads That, line 379 depends for its construction on swere in 372; if one reads But, one assumes a change from indirect to direct asseveration after the long parenthesis of lines 374-8.

380. Stokked, set in the stocks as a punishment; see NED s.v. Stock, vb. 1, 1.

385. I adopt the reading of S1, as a probable representative of the original which underlay the variations presented by the MSS.; see variant readings.

404-406. Departe it so, make this distinction, i.e. between the man who serves in such a matter for money, and the man who acts from motives of friendship. The service in one case is superficially like that in the other; but there is a diversity in the substance, or essential nature. Troilus appeals to a common distinction ("wyde wher is wist") of scholastic philosophy between likeness and identity of substance. My colleague, Professor H. C. Longwell, refers me to the following citations: Duns Scotus, Expositio in Metaph. Arist., Lib. 10, Sum. 2, Cap. 1, No. 30 (ed. Paris 1892, Vol. 6, p. 385): "Oportet ergo ad similitudinem vel aequalitatem adesse substantiae diversitatem. Et ideo bene ait Philosophus [Aristotle] quod similia dicuntur ea quae non sunt eadem simpliciter entia, scilicet secundum speciem substantiae." Thomas Aquinas, Summa, Pars I, Qu. 31, Art. 2, ad 1: "Diversitas requirit distinctionem substantiae, quae est essentia." Both passages rest apparently on Aristotle, Metaphysica. Lib. 10, cap. 3, 1054 b. Chaucer's lines bear a striking verbal similarity to the first sentence of the quotation from Scotus.

Notes to 3. 371-510

409-410. According to Benoit, Troie 2949-55, the three daughters of Priam and Hecuba are Andromache, Cassandra, and Polyxena. (This Andromache seems to be distinct from the wife of Hector.) Frape, crowd, rabble; see NED s.v. Frape, sb. 1.

414. I follow JRS1H2Ph in reading idon. Note the reading of CpClH1Th.

417. A slightly irregular line; a light syllable is omitted after the heavy caesural pause. Skeat and Globe read moste, a form justified neither by the MSS. nor by grammatical considerations.

442-448. This stanza shows thoroughgoing revision in its phrasing; see variant readings. Perhaps the occasion for revision was a desire to improve the metre of 442. (Skeat regards swere as dissyllabic, despite the ensuing vowel.)

450. As writen is in geste. If Chaucer has a specific written authority in mind, it is probably Fil. 2.84:

Griseida, la qual non men discreta,

Gli si mostrava a' tempi vaga e lieta;

but from 3.442 to 3.1309, Chaucer's handling of the story departs far from Boccaccio's.

459. This is one of the rare instances in which  $\alpha$ ,  $\gamma$ , and  $\beta$  present three distinct readings. I regard the  $\gamma$  reading as a mere scribal corruption of  $\beta$ , since all MSS. read or to it leye an ere in the second half of the line, and in  $\gamma$  this it must go back for its antecedent to line 456. I take it that the  $\alpha$  reading, in his speche, was altered to avoid the repetition of the phrase in 462. It may be of significance that, in 462, ADS1 read of this thyng for of hire speche.

490. The  $\beta$  text substitutes a significant phrase for the colorless tag of  $\alpha\gamma$ ; see variant readings.

501-504. Boccaccio, at the corresponding stage of his story, says nothing of letters. In 503, the  $\beta$  text substitutes An hondred vers for Neigh half this book of  $\alpha\gamma$ . In Fil. 2.96-106, 121-7, Boccaccio gives in full letters which Chaucer (2.1065-85, 1219-25) is content to summarize. The first of these letters consists of 88 verses.

510. The MSS., without exception, read fulfille, and hence give a faulty rhyme. Th emends to fulfelle. O.E.  $y$  (umlaut of  $u$ ) is regularly represented by  $i$  in Chaucer (Ten Brink 10,  $\beta$ ); but the Kentish form with  $e$  sometimes appears (Ten Brink 11,  $\epsilon$ ).

Troilus & Criseyde

Gower uses the form felle ("fill") in Conf. Am. 2.3448; 8.34. Compare Wild, p. 56, and in general for Chaucerian forms derived from O.E. ƿ, Wild, pp. 49-70.

512. This line offers both syntactical and metrical difficulties. That seems to introduce a clause dependent on bifel in 511; but bifel is itself in a subordinate clause introduced by That. The That of 511, in its turn, resumes the That of 506. Pandarus is the subject of Hadde in 518. The whole passage, 505-18, is awkwardly involved. Metrically, Pandarus has the value of two syllables (note that H2PhR substitute Pandare). Ƴ has attempted to improve the line by omitting which, and JGgH5 by omitting that.

526-527. The arrangements kept, like hunters, on the leeward side of chattering magpies, who might discover and reveal the secret. A lette-game is a "spoil-sport"; compare Usk, Testament of Love 1.3.124. In the Manciple's Tale, a crow is the spoil-sport who reveals to the injured husband his wife's secret amours. For the magpie as a tell-tale, compare Fame 703; Parliament 345.

529.  $\beta$ H3S1 substitute wilde for the less familiar synonym fremed (see NED s.v. Fremd, 2, b). Note that H2PhGg corrupt fremed into frend.

531. The MSS. favor in this line the form weten rather than witen; see Wild, p. 344.

540. According to Benoit, there was in Troy a temple of Apollo near the gate of Timbree; in this temple was erected the tomb of Hector. See Troie 16635-44, and compare Guido, Historia sig. i 6, b, col. 1: Sepultura Hectoris.

542-543. Skeat cites Ovid, Met. 1.566-7:

factis modo laurea ramis

Adnuit, utque caput visa est agitasse cacumen.

These lines conclude Ovid's account of Daphne, beloved of Apollo, who was metamorphosed into a laurel tree. The laurel was thus sacred ("holy") to Apollo; but I know of no authority for Chaucer's idea that Apollo speaks from out the tree. In the Knight's Tale, the temple doors "clatereden ful faste," and the statue of Mars made its armor ring before the response of the god (A 2422-31). So also the statue of Venus shakes after the prayer of Palamon (A 2265).

549-551. The chaungynge of the moone is the phase opposite to that of full moon, when the Moon is in conjunction with the Sun, and is hence not visible. The sky was also overcast. The night would thus be a very dark one. So in Boccaccio, the first night of the lovers, though very differently managed, is on a dark and cloudy night (Fil. 3.24).

Notes to 3. 512-587

570. Pandarus's statement that Troilus is "out of towne" may have been suggested by the fact that, in Fil. 3.21, Troilo is actually away from the city ("alquanto di lontano"), when Criseida first finds an opportunity to summon him to her house.

572. Yow thurste, it were necessary for you. Out of the confusion of forms given by the MSS., I adopt thurste as having the best attestation; see variant readings. The preterite-present verb tharf early developed a variant thar (see NED s.v. Tharf, thar). The new preterite of tharf is thurfte (note readings of S1H5). From the alternative form thar was derived the new preterite thurte (note reading of D), and with intrusive s (perhaps on the analogy of dar, dorste) the form thurste. The latter form, with minor variations of orthography, is found in JH4GgH3A, and with metathesis of r in CpH1. ClH2PhCxTh substitute forms of the verb dar, dorste, with which tharf, thar was early confused; and R incorporates a gloss aghten. For the present tense, Chaucer seems to have used the form thar (cf. 2.1661, and see Wild, p. 348). This is the only instance in Chaucer of the preterite. (In Rose 1089 and 1324, where Skeat prints thurte, the authorities both read durst, though the context makes clear that a form of thar was intended.) The MSS. are also divided on the form of the accompanying pronoun; see variant readings. The citations in NED show that beside the older impersonal construction, with dative of person, there was an alternative use, with personal subject in the nominative. In 2.1661, the construction with dative hym is clearly attested.

575. Since the whole episode of the supper at the house of Pandarus is Chaucer's addition to the story, it is not strange that his "auctour" should be silent on this detail. This seems to be merely a literary device to suggest to the reader's mind a doubt as to Criseyde's sincerity.

587. I take triste to be present indicative, and most the superlative; but it is possible that Chaucer wrote moste (pret. of moot) with infinitive triste. See variant readings.

Troilus & Criseyde

593. The story of Tantalus is alluded to in Boethius 3. m 12.27; compare Ovid, Met. 4.458. I reject the  $\beta$  reading lenger duelle, because dwelle is the rhyme word in 590. Note that J only partially incorporates the  $\beta$  reading. If an authentic revision, which I doubt, it is not a happy one.

596. For certain as noun, "a certain number," compare Miller's Tale, A 3193, and see NED s.v. Certain, B, 5. The men who accompanied Criseyde were doubtless servants. She is a lady of high station, attended by a numerous retinue.

601. A "stew" is a small heated room, sometimes specifically a room used for hot air or vapor baths; see NED s.v. Stew, sb. 2, 2 and 3. In Fil. 3.25, Troilo awaits Criseida's readiness "in certo luogo rimoto ed oscuro" of her house. In Filocolo (2.172) Florio, concealed in a neighboring room, watches the merry-making of Biancofiore and her companions "per piccolo pertugio"; see Intro., p. xxx.

608. I reject the reading of JH4S1Cx as a clear case of error. Note the emendation of R.

609. Pandarus had provided every imaginable dainty.

614. Wade is a mythical hero of Teutonic legend, to whose magic boat Chaucer alludes in Merchant's Tale, E 1424. His story, which was apparently current in Chaucer's time, survives to us only in scattered allusions, and in a single episode of the Thidreks Saga (ed. Bertelsen, Copenhagen, 1905-11, pp. 73-80), where he is represented as a giant, the father of Wayland the Smith. For a discussion of the story, see article by K. Müllenhoff in Zeits. f. Deutsches Alterthum 6.62-9 (1848) entitled "Wado." Speght in his Chaucer ed. of 1598, commenting on the allusion in Merchant's Tale, says: "Concerning Wade and his bote called Guingelot, as also his strange exploits in the same, because the matter is long and fabulous, I passe it over." See also Skeat's note on Cant. Tales, E 1424 (Skeat refers to Thidreks Saga under the name Wilkina Saga).

617-623. Fortune is the agency which, under God, executes the decrees of weird, or fate. Compare Fortune 65-7:

Lo, thexecucion of the magestee
That al purveyeth of his rightwisnesse,
That same thing Fortune clepen ye,
Ye blinde bestes, ful of lewednesse.

Notes to 3. 593-671

In Knight's Tale, A 1663-6, Destiny is the "ministre general" of divine providence. This conception of Fortune is to be traced to Dante, Inf. 7.78-80. Compare 5.1541-5 and note, where the lines from Dante are quoted. See also Boethius 4. pr 6.35-56; 5. m 1.13-16. The particular astrological influences of the high heavens which, under God, brought about the tarrying of Criseyde are specified in lines 624, 625. Chaucer here accepts the orthodox opinion that astrological influences are subject to the will of God, and are, like Fortune, a means through which the divine providence is executed. We men are too dull (like beasts) to understand astrological causes clearly; compare Man of Law's Tale, B 194-6. See T. O. Wedel, Mediaeval Attitude toward Astrology (Yale Studies in English, 60).

624-626. Bente moone, the new, crescent Moon (compare 3.549, and Boethius, 1. m 5.6-7). The crescent Moon, Saturn, and Jupiter were in conjunction in the sign Cancer. If the moon is a pale crescent in the sign Cancer, the Sun must be in, or approaching, the next preceding sign, Gemini; and the time of year when Pandarus gave his supper party is clearly designated as May or early June. By Chaucer's calendar, the Sun entered Gemini on or about May 12. The conjunction supposed in these lines, a configuration of extremely rare occurrence, actually took place in May 1385. For a fuller discussion of the passage, see Intro., pp. xvi-xviii.

640. Ron, rained. O.E. rīnan, properly a weak verb, was also inflected as a strong verb of Class I, with a preterite rān, which regularly developed into Chaucerian ron, with long open o. The same form appears in 3.677; in 3.1557, the weak preterite reyned is used. See NED s.v. Rine, vb. 2 and Rain, vb.

648. A game, i.e. on game, in jest.

659-668. The evening's merriment presumably took place in the great hall of Pandar's house. Criseyde is to sleep in a small inner room, a "closet," opening out of the hall. By drawing the traverse (3.674), the hall is divided into two rooms. Criseyde's attending women occupy the "myddel chaumbre," the curtained off portion of the hall nearest to Criseyde's "closet"; Pandarus proposes to sleep in the "outer hous," the farther portion of the curtained hall.

671. A cup of wine was the regular preliminary to going to bed; compare Prologue, A 819-20:

Troilus & Criseyde

And therupon the wyn was fet anon;
We dronken, and to reste wente echon.

674. The voide was "a collation of wine accompanied by spices, comfits, or the like, partaken of before retiring to rest"; the name is applied "with reference apparently to the withdrawing from a hall or chamber of those who were not to sleep there" (NED s.v. Voidee). NED quotes from Shirley's Dethe of King James, ed. 1818, p. 13: "Withyn an owre the Kyng askid the voidee, and drank, the travers yn the chambure edraw, and every man de-partid and went to rist." Compare Merchant's Tale, E 1817:

Men drinken and the travers drawe anon.

The travers was a curtain drawn across a room to partition off a portion of it for sleeping; see NED s.v. Traverse, sb., 13.

694-695. Compare Prologue, A 476:

For she coude of that art the olde daunce.

NED, s.v. Dance, sb., 5, quotes Cotgrave: "Elle sçait assez de la vieille danse, she knowes well enough what belongs to the Game." Compare also Physician's Tale, C 79.

696. Kittredge (Language, p. 109) suggests that alle thyng, "originally plural, became a stock phrase, of which the syntax was forgotten or obscured, so that even when a singular was used the plural form alle might be retained."

705. Seint Venus. Note that ay read blisful Venus. In 712, where βγ read blisful Venus, a reads seynt Venus. For the phrase compare Wife of Bath's Prologue, D 604.

711. "To throw the gruel in the fire" is a proverbial phrase, meaning to end the business in failure; compare Richard the Redeless 2.50-2:

Tyl 3e of 3oure dulnesse · deseveraunce made,
Thoru 3oure side signes · that shente all the browet,
And cast adoun the crokk · the colys amyd.

Compare the modern colloquial phrase, "To spill the beans."

715-732. This passage contains an interesting blending of mythology and astrology. Troilus prays first to Venus, as goddess of love, and as an astrological influence, favorable unless she was "combust or let" at his birth. He asks her to intercede with her father, Jupiter (who is astrologically benefic), to turn aside any evil planetary influence. Troilus next appeals to the gods who are identified with the several planets: Jupiter, Mars, Apollo (the Sun), Mercury, Diana (the Moon). They are named in the order of their distance from the Earth according to the old astronomy (compare note on 3.1-2). Venus, whose place is between the Sun and Mercury, has already been invoked at the beginning of the prayer. Saturn, most distant from the Earth, is not invoked, since his influence is inalterably malefic, and since there is no Ovidian myth which relates any Saturnine amour. Detailed notes on the passage follow.

Notes to 3. 674-725

715-717. Mars and Saturn are malefic planets, whereas Jupiter and Venus are benefic. The term aspect is used to denote the angular distance of one planet from another, as seen from the Earth, and is measured in degrees of the zodiac. Literally, it is the way in which they look at one another. Thus, if two planets are 30 degrees or 60 degrees apart, they are said to be in "semi-sextile" or "sextile" aspect respectively; and these are benefic aspects. The "quartile" (90 degrees) and "semi-quartile" (45 degrees) are malefic or "bad" aspects, which bring evil to the person born under them. Saturn and Mars in quartile aspect form a very powerful influence for evil. A planet is said to be combust, i.e. burnt up, when it is within eight and a half degrees of the Sun. Venus, if combust, loses her benefic power. This power may be let, i.e. hindered, by an unfavorable position, or by receiving a bad aspect of another planet. Compare Knight's Tale, A 1087-90.

718. H4 glosses fader as iupiter; compare 3.3.

720-721. H4 has marginal gloss: "Methomorphoseos x<sup>o</sup>, hos tu care mihi." The reference is to Ovid, Met. 10.705. The story of Adonis is told in Met. 10.503-739. Compare Tes. 7.43; Knight's Tale, A 2221-5.

722-723. H4 has marginal gloss: "Perlege methomorphoseos ij." The story of Europa is told by Ovid, Met. 2.833-75.

724. Mars, as god of war, is appropriately dressed in a "bloody cope." The planet, as seen in the sky, has a reddish light; its astrological color is also red.

725. Cipres, Venus, the Cyprian; compare Fame 518. Th reads Cipria, and H5, substituting a gloss, reads Venus. In 5.208, Venus is called "Cipride." Troilus prays Mars, who has himself been in love with Venus, that he will not hinder him ("nought me lette"). Since Mars is a malefic planet, he cannot help; but he may, by taking up a position in which his power is weakened, refrain from hindering.

726-728. H4 has marginal gloss: "Methomorphoseos i, Vix precatur prece finita, etc." This is an inaccurate citation of Met. 1.548, the line at which Daphne's metamorphosis into a laurel tree begins. The story of Daphne is told in Met. 1.452-567.

729-730. H4 has marginal gloss: "Methomorphoseos ij." The story of Herse, beloved of Mercury, is told by Ovid, Met. 2.708-832. Herse's sister, Aglauros, incurred the enmity of Pallas. Pallas caused her to envy her sister Herse; and Mercury turned her to stone. Chaucer's statement that Mercury's love for Herse was the cause of the anger of Pallas against Aglauros is not correct.

733-735. H4 has marginal gloss: "Tres sorores fatales, Cloto, Lathesis, et Attropos. Una, Cloto, colum baiulat." The three Fates are a literary commonplace for which no definite source need be sought. Clotho and her sisters had spun for Troilus the thread of his fate, before any earthly cloth had been shaped to cover his body. Compare Legend 2629-30:

Sin first that day that shapen was my sherte,
Or by the fatal sustren had my dom;

and Knight's Tale, A 1566:

That shapen was my deeth erst than my sherte.

Compare also Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight 489-90. For a full, though rather fanciful, discussion of these passages see L. A. Hibbard, "Chaucer's 'Shapen was my Sherte.'" Philological Quarterly (Univ. of Iowa) 1.222-4. Compare 4.1208, 1546; 5.3-7.

741-749. The trappe is a trap-door, as is explicitly stated at line 759. Ordinarily a trap-door is in floor or ceiling; but, since there is no mention of any ladder, perhaps Chaucer is thinking of a secret door (see ay reading in line 759) in the panelling. The trap-door seems to open directly from the "stuwe," where Troilus is concealed, into Criseyde's bedroom. By this door, Pandarus enters, leading Troilus by a flap of his cloak (742). He first softly closes the door which communicates with the room where Criseyde's women are sleeping (749). Troilus, though in the room during the whole colloquy between uncle and niece, is not seen by Criseyde till line 953.

757. Benedicite. See note to 1.780.

764. Hazlitt (p. 269) cites this proverb in the form: "It is evil waking of a sleeping dog." For various forms of this widely current proverb, see Düringsfeld, 2. no. 599.

775. "To give him a hood above his cap"; see NED s.v. Houve and s.v. Caul. The context shows that the phrase means "to deceive." Compare "sette his howve" (Cant. Tales, A 3911), which means "make him look ridiculous."

776. The reading of  $\gamma H3S1ThJCx$  is hypermetrical, and clearly wrong. The introduction of a second mene before while is an easy scribal blunder; but the corruption was apparently not present in the original at the time when the a MSS. were derived. I suspect that what we have is an authentic revision bungled by the scribe. "As love another in this meene while" would suit metre and context perfectly. Note that H4R preserve the a reading.

782. Oon of this world, i.e. unique.

783. On hym alonge, chargeable to him; see note to 2.1001.

787. Hypermnestra plans to have Lino escape from her room "out at this goter" (Legend 2705), i.e. by help of the eaves-trough; see NED s.v. Gutter, sb. 1, 2.

791. I shal, I owe.

797. Kittredge has pointed out (Language, p. 347) that the name Horaste is a variant of Orestes. Gower, Conf. Am. 3.2176, calls Orestes "Horeste." Chaucer has invented, without any hint from his sources, this imaginary rival lover, and has chosen for him a name from classic story, just as he appropriated the name Antigone for Criseyde's niece. Sholden loven, are said to love.

808. The wicked spirit is that of jealousy; compare 3.837; 5.1212-14. See also Filocolo 1.259-60.

813-836. Criseyde's discussion of false felicity draws heavily on Boethius, 2. pr 4. 56-132: "The swetnesse of mannes welefulnesse is sprayned with many biternesses" (86, 87). "For why ful anguissous thing is the condicioun of mannes goodes; for either it cometh nat al togider to a wight, or elles it last nat perpetuel" (56-8). "What man that this toumbling welefulnesse (caduca ista felicitas) ledeth, either he woot that it is chaungeable, or elles he woot it nat. And yif he woot it nat, what blisful fortune may ther be in the blindnesse of ignorance? And yif he woot that it is chaungeable, he moot alwey ben adrad that he ne lese that thing that he ne doubteth nat but that he may lesen it. . . . For which, the continuel dreed that he hath ne suffreth him nat to ben weleful" (109-17). "How mighte than this present lyf maken men blisful?" (130). With this speech of Criseyde, compare Arcite's speech in Knight's Tale, A 1255-67, and see B. L. Jefferson, Chaucer and Boethius 81-93. It is an effective piece of irony that Criseyde, who utters these stanzas, should in the end become herself the type of worldly joy unstable.

837. In 3.1010, Criseyde speaks of "jalousie . . . that wikked wyvere." In Ovid, Met. 2.768-77, Invidia eats "vipereas carnes," and her tongue is suffused with venom. In Gower, Mirour de l'Omme 2641-5, Detraction, the first of the daughters of Envy, is compared to a snake in the grass. See also Mirour de l'Omme 3709-56.

839. Untriste, not trustful; see NED s.v. Trist, adj. 1 and Tristy, adj. 1.

850. A faire. Skeat glosses "a fair thing, excellent thing (sarcastically)." I think the word is rather to be referred to Fair, market, with some such sense as "a bad bargain"; but I have no citations in support of the conjecture. In 5.1840, "a faire" is used as type of the transitoriness of the world; see note on that passage. Note the reading of H5, all lost, which may be a substituted gloss.

853. H1 and H4 have marginal gloss: "Mora trahit periculum." This seems to be a proverb. Compare Havelok the Dane 1352: "Dwelling haveth ofte scape wrouht." See also Lucan, Pharsalia 1.281: "Tolle moras; semper nocuit differre paratis." Drecchyng, delaying; see NED s.v. Dretch, vb. 2.

855. H4 has marginal gloss: "Omnia tempus habent." The quotation is from Ecclesiastes 3.1. For the form alle, compare note to 3.696.

860. Benedicite. See note to 1.780.

861. The fieldfare is "a species of Thrush (Turdus pilaris), well known as a regular and common autumnal visitor throughout the British Isles" (NED). At the end of winter, it migrates northward. The phrase "Farewell fieldfare" seems to be a pro-verbal expression, meaning "good-bye, I am done with you." It is so used in the Chaucerian Romaunt of the Rose 5510, where the French text has no corresponding phrase.

Notes to 3. 837-938

880. The final e of malice, protected by the caesura, is not elided; but note the reading of  $\gamma H3S1Th$ .

885. Blue is the color of constancy; see NED s.v. Blue, 1, e.

890. "Hazel-woods shake," apparently a proverbial term of derision; compare 5.505.

891-892. For the magic properties of various stones, consult the index of Thorndike's History of Magic s.v. Gems. Apparently the power to bring the dead to life was beyond even the magic virtues of gems.

896. This line seems to be proverbial; but I have not been able to identify the proverb.

901. Feffe, present; see NED s.v. Feoff, and compare Boethius, 2. pr 3.44-5: "tho feffedest thou Fortune with glosinge wordes and deceivedest hir."

919. At prime face, prima facie.

931-938. Dulcarnon is a medieval Latin corruption of an Arabic term meaning "two-horned," and hence a dilemma. Criseyde says she is in a dilemma, "at my wittes ende." Pandarus takes up the word and plays on the fact that "Dulcarnon" was used as a name for the 47th proposition of the first book of Euclid (perhaps on account of the two-horned figure used in the demonstration). But he plays mistakenly; for he confuses the proposition called "Dulcarnon" with another (the 5th proposition of Book I, the "Pons Asinorum"), which was known as "Eleufuga" or "Fuga Miserorum." (H4 has marginal gloss: "Dulcarnon: fuga miserorum.") It is this phrase which Pandarus translates as "flemyng of wrecches," a "putting to flight of wretches." He goes on to explain that the Euclidian proposition is not really so hard; it puts wretched schoolboys to flight only because of their "verray slouthe" and other wilful "tecches" (moral blemishes, vices; see NED s.v. Tache, sb. 1). But Criseyde is wise; and the problem of conduct before her is neither hard, nor one reasonably to be balked. This explanation of Dulcarnon was given in part by Speght in the Annotations of his edition of 1598, who cites Alexander Neckam, De Naturis Rerum, Cap. 173 (Rolls Series, p. 295). It was extended by Skeat in

Troilus & Criseyde

Athenaeum, Sept. 23, 1871, p. 393, and in notes of Oxford Chaucer. See also NED s.v. Dulcarnon, where an allusion to the Chaucerian passage is cited from the works of More (1534).

936. Fecches, vetches, a variety of bean, used as something of little value.

957. Compare 3.81 and note. Chaucer permits himself the identical rhyme of heed, used figuratively of a bed (954), and heed in its literal sense; but see variant readings.

978. There was a fire-place in Criseyde's room; compare 3.1141.

979. Fond his contaunce, made a show, pretended; see NED s.v. Countenance, sb., 2, b, c, d.

989-990. Compare Knight's Tale, A 1169.

1010. Wyvere, viper; see 3.837 and note.

1016-1019. Criseyde's questioning of divine justice suggests Boethius, 1. m 5 ("O stelliferi conditor orbis"), particularly lines 22-35 of the metre.

1021. "That permyttest undeserved jealousy."

1035. Compare 2.784 and note.

1046-1049. Criseyde proposes to establish her innocence by one of three methods: by ordeal, i.e. by some such test as plunging her arm into molten lead; by a solemn oath, in which she should assert her innocence and call down terrible penalties on herself in case she were swearing falsely; by sortilege, i.e. a solemn drawing of lots, in the faith that divine justice would so declare her innocence. For the part played by the first two of these methods in English jurisprudence, see Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law 2.595-9. Proof by ordeal was abolished by the Lateran Council of 1215; and the decree became at once effective in England, except for the continuance of ordeal by battle. Purgation by oath was still a customary procedure in Chaucer's time, and even now survives half seriously in various colloquial formulas of asseveration. Proof by drawing lots plays an important part in the story of George Eliot's Silas Marner.

1060-1061. The merry summer day which follows on a misty morning is proverbial; see Hazlitt, p. 31: "A misty morning may have a fine day." Compare Tale of Beryn 3955-6:

For aftir mysty cloudis þere comyth a clere sonne;
So aftir bale comyth bote, whoso byde conne.

1104-1105. Compare 2.1272-3.

1113. Abreyde, come out (of his swoon); see NED s.v. Abraid, 2, and compare Clerk's Tale, E 1061.

1115. In ay, they wet his temples.

1120. Adawe, wake up, literally, dawn; see NED s.v. Adaw, vb. 1, 1.

1154. She bar hym on honde, she maintained against him, i.e. accused him. Bere on honde seems to be a translation of the French main-tenir; see NED s.v. Bear, vb. 1, 3 e. Hym is dative.

1155. Hire to fonde, to make trial of her; see NED s.v. Fand, 1.

1161. What Troilus said was of so little value that it would be dear at the price of a stalk of rush. For the rush as a type of worthlessness, see NED s.v. Rush, sb. 1, 2. Compare 3.1167.

1184. Supprised, seized, violently affected, from O.F. sous-prendre, a variant of surprendre; see NED s.v. Supprise, 2.

1189. Pandarus "laid himself down to sleep," i.e. he went to his own bedroom.

1192-1193. Compare Filocolo 2.165-6: "dove Filocolo timido, come la grù sotto il falcone, o la colomba sotto il rapace spariere, dimorava." The circumstances are, however, quite different.

1194. "Regardless of whether, to a given reader, the tale may seem (sweet as) sugar or (bitter as) soot." Compare Usk, Testament of Love 2.9.37-9: "al sugre and hony . . . ben but soot and galle in comparison"; and Political Songs (Camden Society, Vol. 6), p. 195: "Hit falleth the Kyng of Fraunce bittrore then the sote." (NED s.v. Soot.)

1199. Chaucer's appeal to the old books of the clerks is delightfully ironic. Boccaccio's heroine (Fil. 3.32) does not tremble with fear.

1203. The "bryghte goddes sevene" are the seven planets, which control our destiny. The phrase is repeated in Envoy to Scogan 3. The reading blisful for bryghte found in  $\gamma S1Th$  is certainly corrupt.

Troilus & Criseyde

1204. Troilus has passed through Purgatory into Heaven.

1212-1215. Compare the proverb: "Bitter pills may have sweet effects" (Hazlitt, p. 104).

1219-1220. Compare Alanus de Insulis, Liber Parabolarum, ed. Migne, col. 592:

Dulcius haerescunt humano mella palato,
Si malus hoc ipsum mordeat ante sapor.

See also Boethius, 3. m 1.4-5: "Hony is the more swete, yif mouthes han first tasted savoures that ben wikkid." Compare 1.638-44 and note.

1230-1232. Bytrent and writhe are both present indicative, the termination -eth being absorbed in the dental which ends the word. Bytrent means "winds about"; see NED s.v. Betrend. The tree and vine as a figure for a close embrace is a literary commonplace; see Ovid, Met. 4.365; Dante, Inf. 25.58-60; Petrarch, Sonn. 277.8; Filocolo 1.262.

1235. "When she hears any shepherd speak."

1241. Moste, pret. subj. with present meaning, indicating a weaker obligation than the present mot; see Wild, p. 350. Note that ay read mot.

1255-1257. Venus is astrologically a benevolent ("wel-willy") planet. Note the blending of mythology and astrology. Dante, Purg. 27.95, applies the name "Citerea" to the planet Venus.

1258. Hymenaeus, or Hymen, patron of marriage. H4 in margin of line 1261 has gloss: "Hemaneus deus vinculorum."

1261. Compare 3.1744-71 and note.

1262-1267. Chaucer's lines are modelled on Dante, Par. 33.13-18:

Donna, sei tanto grande e tanto vali,
Che qual vuol grazia ed a te non ricorre,
Sua disianza vuol volar senz' ali.
La tua benignità non pur soccorre
A chi domanda, ma molte fiäte
Liberamente al domandar precorre.

Dante's lines are addressed to the Blessed Virgin; Chaucer transfers them to the praise of Love. Lines 1266-7 resemble Chaucer's A.B.C. 180:

Notes to 3. 1204-1341

That, nere thy tender herte, we weren spilt.

1282. Compare Knight's Tale, A 3089,

For gentil mercy oghte to passen right, where Theseus urges Emily to show her "wommanly pitee" to the faithful Palamon; and Legend, Prol. B 161-2:

Yet Pitee, through his stronge gentil might,

Forgaf, and made Mercy passen Right.

The language of courtly love has transferred to its own use the theological opposition of divine mercy and strict justice. Compare Psalm 84.11: "Misericordia et veritas obviaverunt sibi: justitia et pax osculatae sunt." See also Usk, Testament of Love 3.1.133-7.

1291. I retain the  $\alpha\gamma$  reading in this line because the  $\beta$  reading, though possibly originating in an authentic revision, is in the existing  $\beta$  MSS. clearly corrupt. As found in JRCx, it is unmetrical; and the reading how that of H3H4 seems to be a not very happy scribal emendation. Note the other variant readings.

1310. From here to the end of Book III, Chaucer follows, though freely and with numerous additions, Fil. 3.31-73, 90-3.

1316. Compare Fil. 3.32:

D'amor sentiron l'ultimo valore;

but Chaucer has either misunderstood, or deliberately changed, the meaning of the Italian line.

1323. Between lines 1323 and 1324,  $\alpha\gamma$ Th insert stanzas 201 and 202. See note on 3.1401-14. Since Skeat and Globe follow the  $\alpha\gamma$  arrangement, I have, for convenience of comparison, given in parentheses the line-numbering of Skeat's text for the whole passage affected by the shift.

1330. From Fil. 3.34:

O t'ho io in braccio, o sogno, o se' tu desso?

1341. Compare Fil. 3.36:

Voi mi tenete e sempre mi terrete,

Occhi miei bei, nell'amorosa rete.

Troilus & Criseyde

1346.  $\gamma$ Tha read an hondred. The reading a thousand is nearer to Fil. 3.37: "mille sospiri."

1352-1358. This stanza has no counterpart in Filostrato. In Filocolo (2.181) Florio solemnly espouses Biancofiore with a ring, which she had previously given to him. The lovers then leave the bed, and exchange formal vows before the image of Cupid. The gift of the ring symbolizes the fact that Florio regards the lady not as "amica," but as "inseparabile sposa." No such significance attaches to the episode in Chaucer. The interchange of rings is a commonplace of the ritual of love, for which no definite source can be assigned.

1355. Scripture, inscription, or motto, engraved on the rings; see NED s.v. Scripture, 3.

1359-1372. From Fil. 3.38-9.

1361. Mokre and cecche, hoard and scrape together; see NED s.v. Mucker, vb. 1, and compare Boethius, 2. pr 5. 11: "for avarice maketh alwey mokereres to ben hated." The verb is apparently derived from Muck, dung, contemptuously applied to accumulated wealth. I adopt the reading cecche, though attested only by the unreliable authority of GgH5, as best fitting the context, and serving best to explain the MS. variants. It is a dialectal variant of cracche; see NED s.v. Cratch, vb., 2, and note particularly the citation of Thomas Becon (1564), Wks. Pref. (1843) 26: "He that doth nothing but rake and take, cratch and snatch, keep and sweep all that he can get." The meaning "scrape together" continues and extends the idea of mokre. A scribe, unfamiliar with the form, might easily misread the initial c as a t, and so alter to tecche or theche (see variant readings). For these forms with t, I can see no justification. Theche might conceivably mean "thatch," in the sense of concealing one's gains; but I know of no such figurative use of the word. Kecche, the reading of JClCxTh would be a variant of cacche, with the significance "lay hold of" (see NED s.v. Catch, vb., 6 b); but it has every appearance of being a scribal emendation of tecche. Skeat and Globe read kecche. The Italian (Fil. 3.38) reads "a far denari," "to make money," and gives no clue to the solution of the problem. Note that denari is rendered by Chaucer as pens, pence.

1370. The white and ek the rede seems to mean "white silver and red gold." Fil. 3.39 reads: "denari perderanno." In Par- doner's Tale, C 526 whyte and rede means "white and red wine"; compare Nun's Priest's Tale, B 4032. Possibly Chaucer here means that misers must forego the pleasure of drinking wine.

Notes to 3. 1346-1415

1373-1379. This stanza has no counterpart in Filostrato. The story of Midas, who was granted his wish that whatever he touched should turn to gold, and who was punished for his folly by having his ears changed into the long ears of an ass, is told by Ovid, Met. 11.100-93. M. Crassus, surnamed Dives, Roman general and consul, was killed in an expedition against the Parthians in 53 B.C. Florus, Epitoma 1.46.11, relates that his head was cut off and sent to Orodes, King of Parthia. "Aurum enim liquidum in rictum oris infusum est, ut cuius animus arserat auri cupiditate." Both Midas and Crassus are stock examples to prove that "coveytise is vice." They are so used by Dante, Purg. 20. 106-8, 116-17, and by Gower, Conf. Am. 5.141-332, 2068-224. In Gower, the potion of molten gold is administered to Crassus while still alive.

1378-1379. See variant readings. The  $\beta$  reading is more sharply pointed, and distinctly an improvement.

1401-1414. In the  $\alpha\gamma$  text, these two stanzas follow line 1323. In  $\beta$  (JRCxH3S1), they are moved to the position which they occupy in this edition. H4 (here normally a  $\beta$  MS.) has the two stanzas in both positions. In these stanzas, there are a number of distinctive  $\beta$  readings (see variants). H4 has the two stanzas in the  $\alpha\gamma$  position with  $\alpha\gamma$  readings, and then repeats them in the  $\beta$  position with  $\beta$  readings. That the shift was deliberate, is shown by the fact that  $\beta$  has revised 1323 to suit the new context. (S1, though transposing the stanzas, retains the  $\alpha\gamma$  reading of 1323.) That the  $\alpha\gamma$  position is more original, is shown by the echo of telle from 1323 to the first line of the shifted passage. Moreover, had the  $\beta$  position been original, there would have been no need to revise line 1415. What artistic motive may have led to the shift is not clear. The stanzas contain the author's reflections on the story, and in either position interrupt the flow of the narrative; though the  $\beta$  position, just before the transition to the dawn, seems a more appropriate place for comment. The passage has no counterpart in Filostrato.

1408-1413. Compare 2.12-35.

1415. The cock is called common astrologer, because by his crowning he proclaims to all the approach of sunrise; compare Nun's Priest's Tale, B 4045-8, and Parliament 350. S2 and S1 have marginal gloss: "Vulgaris astrologus"; and H4 glosses: "Gallus vulgaris astrologus; Alanus de planctu nature." The phrase is taken from Alanus de Insulis, De Planctu Naturae, ed. Migne, col. 436 A: "Illic gallus tanquam vulgaris astrologus, suae vocis horologio, horarum loquebatur discrimina."

Troilus & Criseyde

1417-1418. S1 and S2 have marginal gloss: "Stella matutina"; and H4 glosses: "Lucifera stella matutina." The feminine pronoun hire indicates that the morning star was Venus. In Knight's Tale, A 1491, the busy lark is called "messenger of day." The reading bemes for stremes, found in ayS1Th, gives a virtually identical meaning. For stremes in the sense of "rays of light," compare 1.305; 3.129; Duchess 338; Complaint of Mars 83; Knight's Tale, A 1495.

1419-1420. These lines, which have no counterpart in Boccaccio, seem to have been suggested by Dante, Purg. 19.4-6:

Quando i geomanti lor maggior fortuna
Veggiono in oriente, innanzi all'alba,
Surger per via che poco le sta bruna.

Fortuna Major is the name of one of the sixteen "figures" of the occult art of geomancy. Among the other figures are Puella and Rubeus, referred to in Knight's Tale, A 2045 (see Skeat's note on that passage, Oxford Chaucer 5.82-3). Geomancy is a bastard form of "horary" astrology, by means of which one may resolve questions without the trouble of consulting an almanach, or looking at the skies. By a process of setting down at random a series of dots, the artist derives one or other of the sixteen figures. (See Henry Cornelius Agrippa, De Occulta Philosophia, Lib. 3, ad fin.; Lib. 2, Cap. 48, and the treatise of Gerardus Cremonensis which is included in the 1531 ed. of Agrippa.) The figure so derived will refer him to one of the signs of the zodiac, and to one of the seven planets. Thus, Fortuna Major refers to the Sun, and to the sign Aquarius. By continuing the process, the geomancer constructs an arbitrary, or fortuitous, "figure of the heavens," with the planets disposed among the signs, from which he can draw astrological conclusions.

Notes to 3. 1417-1442

Skeat happily compared to a four of diamonds placed above a two of diamonds. The name, Fortuna Major, seems to have been applied to a group of six stars in the constellations of Aquarius and Pegasus, which conform roughly in disposition to the geomantic figure. For this transfer of the name, I can find no authority in the geomantic manuals which I have seen; but the fact is asserted in the fourteenth century commentary of Benvenuto da Imola on Dante, Purg. 19.4, and repeated thence in modern commentaries on Dante. Skeat, with the aid of Sir Robert Ball, identified the group as comprised of  $\theta$  Pegasi, and  $\alpha$ ,  $\pi$ ,  $\gamma$ ,  $\zeta$ ,  $\eta$  Aquarii (Academy, November 3, 1894, p. 352). The identification may be verified from any detailed astronomical atlas. It is this group of stars, then, that was rising in the eastern sky when Lucifer appeared above the horizon. The ecliptic longitude of the centre of this group was in the latter part of the fourteenth century about 319 degrees. In the middle of May (compare note on 3.624-6) these stars should have been about 80 degrees west of the Sun. When the first light of dawn appeared in Troy, the group of stars called Fortuna Major, by "hym that koude it knowe," was about half-way between the eastern horizon and the zenith, and was still rising "estward," with the four stars properly placed above the two. (See article by R. K. Root and H. N. Russell in P.M.L.A. 39.56-8.)

In line 1420, the reading that anoon Criseyde is given in all the MSS. Skeat emends by reading than for that. I have preferred to keep the MS. reading. It would seem that Chaucer changed his mind in the middle of the sentence, and never revised the passage. For the construction, compare 4.31-3.

1423-1424. "How woful is it to me that I was ever born, now that day must divide us!"

1428. H1 has marginal gloss: "Almena mater herculis"; and H4 glosses: "Almena fuit mater herculis." When Jove lay with Alcmena to beget Hercules, he miraculously extended the duration of the night; see Hyginus, Fab. 29, and compare Tes. 4.14. According to the Roman de Thèbes (ed. Constans, 2.88), Alcmena lay with Jupiter "iij nuiz ensemble"; so also Boccaccio, Gen. Deorum, Lib. 13, who cites Lucan as his authority.

1429-1442. Criseyde's reproaching of Night has no counterpart in Filostrato.

Troilus & Criseyde

1433-1435. These lines bear a general resemblance to Ovid, Amores 1.13.15-34.

1436-1442. The Night is thought of as circling the Earth, opposite to the Sun. But instead of keeping its proper speed, Night is doing its office too hastily (rakel, hasty, impetuous; see NED s.v. Rackle), and is maliciously hurrying below the horizon, and making way for Day. May God curse the Night, and bind it to our hemisphere, so that it may never again be able to go below the horizon. (For the use of ther to introduce a prayer or curse, compare 3.947, 966, 1456.) Compare Filocolo 1.173 for a somewhat similar address to the Night, where, however, the Night is chided for its slowness. Note ay reading in 1438-9.

1450-1470. The only hint of this passage in Boccaccio is found in the lines (Fil. 3.44):

Il giorno che venia maledicendo,
Che lor così avaccio separava.

1453. "Every aperture (which admits the light) possesses, as it were, one of thy bright eyes."

1462. Engravers of small seals would be willing to buy additional day-light.

1464-1470. Chaucer has confused Titan, the Sun (cf. Ovid, Met. 1.10) with Tithonus, the mortal lover for whom Aurora, "the dawying," the "Morwe," obtained the boon of immortality but not the gift of eternal youth. But the confusion is older than Chaucer. Servius in his comment on Virgil, Georg. 3.48, says: "et modo Tithonum pro Sole posuit, id est pro Titane: nam Tithonus frater Laomedontis fuit, quem proeliantem Aurora dilexit et rapuit." The same confusion occurs in Boccaccio, Filocolo 1.173: "O dolcissimo Apollo, il quale desideroso suoli si prestamente tornare nelle braccia della rosseggiante Aurora." (Compare also Filocolo 2.222.) In Dante, Purg. 9.1, some MSS. read Titan, others Titon, i.e. Tithonus.

1490. Fil. 3.47 reads:

Più caro mi saria che'l troian regno.

In Chaucer the "Trojan kingdom" is expanded to "thise worldes tweyne," which seems to mean "two worlds such as this."

1495-1498. Skeat suggests that this passage "somewhat resembles" Virgil, Ecl. 1.60-4. The resemblance is entirely general, except for the last line:

Notes to 3. 1433-1624

Quam nostro illius labatur pectore vultus.

1496. The text of aySiTh reads dowves for haukes. The companionship of eagle and dove seems a more striking portent than that of eagle and hawk; but eagle and night-hawk are traditional foes. Pliny, Nat. Hist. 10.24 says: "Nocturnus accipiter . . . bellum internecivum gerit cum aquila, cohaerentesque saepe prenduntur." The statement is repeated by Vincent of Beauvais, Spec. Nat. Lib. 17, Cap. 20.

1499. Compare Boethius, 5. m 4. 1-15: "That wenden that images and sensibillitees . . . weren empreinted into sowles fro bodies without-forth; . . . right as we ben wont som tyme, by a swifte pointel, to ficchen lettres empreinted in the smothernesse or in the pleinness of the table of wex." Compare also 1.297-8.

1502. Compare 1.674 and note.

1546. Compare Legend 1156-7:

Of which ther gan to bredden swich a fyr,
That sely Dido hath now swich desyr.

1577. Perhaps an echo of Luke 23.34: "Iesus autem dicebat: Pater, dimitte illis; non enim sciunt quod faciunt"; but his may refer to Pandarus (compare line 1572).

1595. The evidence of the MSS. is overwhelmingly in favor of blisse.

1600. Phlegethon is the infernal river of fire (Virgil, Aen. 6.551). Note variant readings. H4RH3Cx (and probably J before erasure) contain forms which are intended for Cocytus, the river of lamentation. It is interesting to note that MS. S of Roman de Thèbes makes "Cochiton" a river "ardanz a toutes leis Assez plus qe nuls fous grezeis" (ed. Constans, 2.17). It is possible that the  $\beta$  MSS. represent a mistaken alteration on the part of Chaucer himself. This is the only passage in Chaucer in which either river is mentioned. Compare Gower, Conf. Am. 5.1109-10.

1622-1624. Filostrato 3.60 reads:

[ 491 ]

Troilus & Criseyde

che dove'l tormento
Hai tolto via con diletta gioia,
Per favellar non ti ritorni in noia.

1625-1628. A free rendering of Boethius, 2. pr 4.4-7: "Sed hoc est quod recolentem vehementius coquit. Nam in omni adversitate fortunae infelicissimum est genus infortunii fuisse felicem." Chaucer here follows the Latin more closely than in his translation of Boethius: "But this is a thing that greetly smerteth me whan it remembreth me. For in alle adversitee of fortune, the most unsely kinde of contrarious fortune is to han ben weleful." Compare Dante, Inf. 5.121-3:

Nessun maggior dolore
Che ricordarsi del tempo felice
Nella miseria.

Compare also Thomas Aquinas, Summa 2.2.36.1, and Tennyson, Locksley Hall 76: "That a sorrow's crown of sorrow is remembering happier things."

1634. Compare Ovid, Art. Am. 2.11-13:

Non satis est venisse tibi me vate puellam:
Arte mea captast, arte tenenda meast.
Nec minor est virtus, quam quaerere, parta tueri.

Chaucer's line is perhaps a little closer to the paraphrase of Ovid in Rose (Langlois) 8261-3:

Car la vertu n'est mie mendre
De bien garder e de defendre
Les choses, quant eus sont aquises.

1636. Compare 3.813-15, 820, 836.

1642. It seems clear that rakle, ordinarily an adjective meaning "hasty, rash," is here used as a verb; see NED s.v. Rackle. The readings of H2Ph and A seem to be scribal attempts at emendation.

1643. I adopt the reading stere on the authority of H3RS1Cx, since it so perfectly fits the context. To "stir a matter," or "stir a question," is a common locution in the sense of "bring into notice or debate"; see NED s.v. Stir, vb., 10, and compare Boethius, 3. pr 12.148. I can find no justification for "tearing a matter." The reading tere must be explained as a scribal corruption in the original MS. which long escaped correction. (Note that J reads of to tere, with to written over erasure.)

Notes to 3. 1625-1744

1685. The  $\beta$  MSS. are confused in their reading. In the  $\beta$  original, the word sorwe was either omitted or illegible; and various scribes have tried to emend.

1687. Comprende, a shortened form of comprehende, is clearly demanded by the metre; see NED s.v. Comprend.

1691-1692. Compare Boethius, 3. pr 2. 6-9: "And blisfulnesse is swiche a good, that whoso that hath geten it, he ne may, over that, nothing more desyre. And this thing is forsothe the sovereyn good that conteyneth in himself alle maner goodes."

1693. Compare Dante, Par. 19.8:

Non portò voce mai, né scrisse inchiostro.

1703. The chariot of the Sun is drawn by four horses: Pyrois, Eous, Aethon, and Phlegon; see Ovid, Met. 2.153-4. Note variant readings.

1705-1706. The horses of the Sun have taken a short cut, which has brought day in ahead of its due time.

1707-1708. Troilus was apparently in the habit of doing sacrifice to Apollo; compare 3.539-41.

1716-1719. Chaucer's lines are a composite of two widely separated passages in Boccaccio. Fil. 3.72 reads:

Era contento Troilo, ed in canti Menava la sua vita e in allegrezza;

and Fil. 2.84:

Troilo canta e fa mirabil festa,
Armeggia, spende, e dona lietamente,
E spesso si rinnuova e cangia vesta.

Compare also Tes. 4.62.

1718. I read festeyinges on the authority of S1 alone, since the metre clearly demands the four syllables. The reading gains support from the festeynynges of ClH1. Compare 5.455 and the variant readings of that line. Festeyinges must be referred to O.F. festeier, to make a feast, give an entertainment.

1744-1771. Troilus's hymn to Love is a close paraphrase of Boethius, 2. m 8 (though with some rearrangement in the order of the ideas): "That the world with stable feith varieth acordable chaunginges; that the contrarious qualitee of elements holden among hemself aliaunce perdurable; that Phebus the sonne with his goldene chariet bringeth forth the rosene day; that the mone hath commaundement over the nightes, which nightes Hesperus the eve-sterre hath brought; that the see, greedy to flowen, constreyneth with a certein ende hise flodes, so that it is nat leueful to strecche his brode termes or boundes upon the erthes, that is to seyn, to couere al the erthe:—al this acordaunce of thinges is bounden with Love, that governeth erthe and see, and hath also commaundements to the hevenes. And yif this Love slakede the brydeles, alle thinges that now loven hem togederes wolden maken a bataile continuely, and stryven to fordoon the fasoun of this worlde, the whiche they now leden in acordable feith by faire moevinges. This Love halt togideres poeples joined with an holy bond, and knitteth sacrament of mariages of chaste loves; and Love endyteth lawes to trewe felawes. O! weleful were mankinde, yif thilke Love that governeth hevene governed youre corages!"

At this point in Filostrato, Troilo sings to Love a hymn (3.74-9) which is also based in part on this Metre of Boethius. These stanzas of Filostrato Chaucer has used as Proem (lines 1-38) to his third book. Having so used them, it was necessary to find new material for the song of Troilus; and Chaucer turned back to the passage in Boethius from which Boccaccio had received his inspiration. The four stanzas of Troilus's hymn are omitted by H2; in the closely related Ph they have been added later, though by the original scribe, on an inset leaf. Since in this part of the poem H2Ph represent the earliest state of Chaucer's text, it would seem that the poet did not in his first draft provide a song for Troilus to sing. In GgH5, however, which also give an a text, the stanzas are already present. For further discussion of the matter, see Introd., p. lxxi.

1748. Enditeth. Note the variant reading knetteth found in γS1Th and in Ph. (H3 reads kennyth.) H2 omits the entire passage; Ph has the passage on inset leaf, and its text is apparently derived from a γ source. The original of line 1748 is the "Hic fidis etiam sua Dictat iura sodalibus" of Boethius, 2. m 8; but line 1749 reproduces "Hic et coniugii sacrum Castis nectit amoribus," which in the Latin immediately precedes. (For Chaucer's translation of the passage, see preceding note.) If enditeth translates dictat, knetteth is a literal rendering of nectit. The  $\gamma$  reading cannot, therefore, be dismissed as a scribal corruption. Apparently Chaucer first wrote knetteth and then changed to enditeth, which is the proper word in the context. If so, GgH5 must have derived their text of the hymn from a  $\beta$  source.

1754. That the reading of JRCxGgH5, Holde in, is a scribal corruption of Holden is proved by the Latin, "Foedus perpetuum tenen<sup>a</sup>" of Boethius, 2. m 8.

1774-1775. The corresponding lines of Filostrato (3.90) read:

Che ciascun ne dottava, se non erra
La storia.

The comparison with Hector has the authority of Benoit, Troie 3990-2:

Mais ço nos retraits bien l'Autor,
Poi ert meins forz en son endreit
Ne meins hardiz qu'Hector esteit.

Compare 2.158-61 and note. See also Guido, Historia sig. k 6, a, col. 2: Potentia Troili.

1779-1781. From Fil. 3.91.

1782-1785. Fil. 3.91 reads:

Ed a'suoi tempi Griseida vedendo
Si rifaceva grazioso e bello
Come falcon ch'uscisse dī cappello.

In the Italian it is Troilo who is compared to the falcon.

1805. Chaucer specifies four of the Seven Deadly Sins.

1807-1810. The Proem to Book III is a hymn to Love, and an appeal to the Muse Calliope; and at the close of the book, Chaucer again addresses Venus and the Muses. That Venus was daughter to Dione, Chaucer might have learned from Virgil, Aen. 3.19, or from Claudian, De Rapt. Pros. 3.433. It is possible that the suggestion of lines 1807-8 came from Dante, Par. 8.7-8:

Ma Dione onoravano e Cupido,
Quella par madre sua, questo per figlio.

Compare also Tes. 1.3. Lines 1809-10 are certainly inspired by the Teseide. At the very beginning of that poem we read:

Troilus & Criseyde

O sorelle Castalie, che nel monte Elicon contente dimorate
D'intorno al sacro gorgoneo fonte.

And in Tes. 11.63:

E quindi sotto l'ombre graziose
Sopra Parnaso presso all'Elicone
Fonte seder con le nove amorose
Muse, e cantar maestrevol canzone.

Helicon was not near Parnassus; but Chaucer places them together also in Anelida 16-17; and in Fame 518-22 we find:

Now faire blisful, O Cipris,
So be my favour at this tyme!
And ye, me to endyte and ryme
Helpeth, that on Parnaso dwelle
By Elicon, the clere welle.

Actually Helicon is a mountain in Boeotia, on whose slopes was the fount of Hippocrene. In Fame Helicon becomes a "clere welle"; and in the present passage also it is probable that Chaucer thought of it as a fountain. Boccaccio, in Tes. 1.1, calls Elicon a mountain; but in Tes. 11.63 it is a fountain. Compare Dante, Purg. 29.40, and Virgil, Aen. 7.641, which might suggest that Helicon was a fountain. Compare also Guido, Historia, sig. a 5, a, col. 1: "Sic totum cordis aviditate scientiae imbibens Elicon." For the proximity of Helicon and Parnassus, there is abundance of post-classical authority, e.g. Servius in his commentary on Aen. 7.641. For further references on this point, and for an illuminating discussion of Chaucer's use of Dante and Boccaccio in the present passage, see article by Lowes, Mod. Phil. 14.705-35.

NOTES TO BOOK FOUR

NOTES TO BOOK FOUR

1-9. Lines 1 and 2 are from Fil. 3.94:

Ma poco tempo durò cotal bene,
Mercè della fortuna invidiosa.

The remainder of the stanza is made up out of memories of Boethius. With lines 3-5, compare Boethius, 2. pr 1. 12-15: "Fortune . . . useth ful flateringe familiaritee with hem that she enforceth to bigyle; so longe, til that she confounde with unsufferable sorwe hem that she hath left in despeyr unpurveyed." With lines 6 and 7, compare 2. m 1.8-10: "She is so hard that she laugheth and scorneth the wepinges of hem, the whiche she hath maked wepe." With these lines, compare also Rose (Langlois) 8039-41:

E me firent trestuit la moe
Quant il me virent souz la roe
De Fortune.

Lines 8 and 9 return to Fil. 3.94:

Ella li volse la faccia crucciosa.

With the whole passage, compare 1.139, 837-54 and notes.

18-21. No specific allusion seems to be intended. Boccaccio, Benoit, and Guido all find cause to speak harm of the heroine. Young (p. 127) refers particularly to Troie 13429-94, 13859-66 and Historia sig. i 2, a, col. 2; sig. i 3, a, col. 2. In these passages the authors take occasion from the falseness of Briseida to point the essential fickleness of woman.

22-24. H4 has marginal gloss: "Herine furie infernales; unde lucanus: me pronuba ducit herinis." The reference is to Pharsalia 8.90; but the passage in Lucan has no bearing on Chaucer's lines. The idea that the Furies are daughters of Night may have been derived from Ovid, Met. 4.451-2: "illa sorores Nocte vocat genitas." (Compare Aeschylus, Eumen. 323, 419; Sophocles, Oed. Col. 40, 106; Boccaccio, Gen. Deorum. 3.6-9.) Chaucer's lines suggest Dante's picture of the "Tre furie infernal," Inf. 9 37-51:

Troilus & Criseyde

"Guarda," mi disse, "le feroci Erine.
Questa è Megera dal sinistro canto;
Quella che piange dal destro è Aletto:
Tesifone è nel mezzo."

But Chaucer might have learned of the Furies from many sources; see Wise, Statius, pp. 12-13; Fansler, Rose, pp. 50-1; Lowes, Mod. Phil. 14.718-20, and compare 1.9; Franklin's Tale, F 950.

25. Quirinus is a name given to Romulus, the mythical founder of Rome (Ovid, Fasti 2.475-6). He was a son of Mars according to Virgil, Aen. 1.274-6. 292; Ovid. Met. 15.863, Fasti 2.419. Compare Dante, Par. 8.131-2. For the epithet "cruel," compare Statius, Theb. 7.703. Astrologically, Mars is a malefic planet.

29-35. Chaucer is following closely Fil. 4.1. This battle, in which Antenor is captured, is the Fifth Battle of Benoit (Troie 11995-2682) and Guido (Historia sig. h 5, b, col. 1, Bellum quintum).

31-32. The Sun was in the early part of the sign Leo. In Chaucer's time, the Sun entered Leo on or about July 12. Since the figure of the Lion, which gives its name to the constellation, faces towards the west, the breast of the Lion would be the portion which the Sun first enters. But even in Chaucer's time the constellation Leo had, as a result of the precession of the equinoxes, long ceased to coincide with the zodiacal sign Leo. Since Chaucer's intention is to indicate the season of the year, one may assume that he is thinking of the sign rather than of the constellation. (Compare note to 4.1590-6.) I believe, therefore, that Skeat's reference to the star Regulus, also known as Cor Leonis, is beside the point. The phrase Hercules lyoun alludes to the labor of Hercules in killing the Nemean lion. The Chaucerian passage is an adaptation of Ovid, Art. Am. 1.68:

Cum sol Herculei terga Leonis adit.

37. Note the readings of JH2PhH5 (Gg lacking), which point to an authentic a reading issen (retained also by J, which does not become an a MS. till after 4.430). The verb issen (O.F. issir), to issue forth, is used by Chaucer in the second sing. issect in Boethius, 3. pr 12.119. The reading is supported by Fil. 4.1: "Ettor . . . Incontro a' Greci uscì negli ampi piani."

38-42. These lines, which have no counterpart in Boccaccio, suggest the opening lines of Benoit's account of the Fifth Battle (Troie 11996-2006):

Notes to 4. 25-54

E senz nule autre demoree
Se rarerent tost e isnel,
Quar venir veient tel cembel
Ou a dis mile chevaliers
Trestoz armez sor lor destriers ;
N'i a cel n'ait heaume lacié,
Escu e lance e bon espié
Cler e trenchant d'acier molu.
Cil de Troie s'en sont eissu
Volenterif e desiros
De Grezeis faire coroços.

There is no parallel passage in Guido.

39-40. Note that  $\gamma$ SiTh and H5 (Gg lacking) transpose the order of these lines. Either order is possible ; but the arrangement of  $\gamma$  separates armed bright and shene of line 38 from with spere in honde of line 39.

47. Shour. Compare 3.1064 and note.

50-54. The corresponding lines in Boccaccio (Fil. 4.2-3) read :

Ed assai ve ne furon per prigionì,
Nòbili re, ed altri gran baronì.

Tra' quali fu il magnifico Antenorre,
Polidamas suo figlio, e Menesteo,
Santippo, Serpedon, Polinestorre,
Polite ancora, ed il troian Rifeo,
E molti più.

For this heaping up of prisoners, Boccaccio has no authority either in Benoit or in Guido. According to these authorities, Polidamas, who was not with his father Antenor at the moment of his capture, tried to deliver him, and vainly urged the Trojans to continue the battle. Santippo seems to be Antipus, King of Frisia, and ally of Priam, who was killed in the same battle (the Fifth) in which Antenor was captured. Even in Boccaccio, Sarpedon is in Troy to entertain Troilo and Pandaro shortly after this battle. Polimestor, king of Thrace, is mentioned by Benoit (Troie 26723 ff.), but not in connection with this battle. Boccaccio seems to have taken the other names from Virgil—Polites, Aen. 2.526; Rhipeus, Aen. 2.339; Mnestheus, Aen. 5.116, 184, 194, etc. (Benoit's Menesteus, Duke of Athens, is a Greek).

Troilus & Criseyde

Chaucer has kept the list of names, to which he has added, apparently from his own invention, that of "Phebuseo"; but he has brought the passage into accord with Benoit and Guido by the word "maugre." Antenor was taken "in spite of" the efforts of Polydamas and the rest. According to Guido, the Trojans retired from the field, leaving Antenor prisoner, "non obstante quod Polidamas, Anthenoris filius, qui sui patris non interfuit captioni, pro recuperatione ipsius multa commisisset in bello" (Historia sig. i 1, a, col. 1: Bellum quintum). Compare Benoit, Troie 12551-65. H3 in line 51 reads Palidomas and also Menes-tes, omitting maugre, and in line 53 reads and for or. This brings its reading into conformity with Boccaccio. After line 299 of Book IV, H3 becomes an a MS.; and between line 1301 and line 1442 gives a number of unique readings, some of which appear to represent Chaucer's text in its earliest state. One is tempted to regard the H3 reading in this passage as Chaucer's earliest draft, subsequently revised to bring it into accord with Guido; but it may be only a scribal revision of what is, after all, a somewhat confused stanza.

57-58. Fil. 4.4 reads:

Chiese Priamo triegua, e fugli data.

Both the final  $\beta$  text, given in this edition, and the  $\alpha\gamma$  text definitely contradict Boccaccio's statement. Chaucer, however, is in agreement with Benoit and Guido, where Ulysses and Diomedes are sent by the Greeks to ask for a truce, which is granted by Priam and his council, though against the advice of Hector. See Troie 12853-3008; Historia sig. i 1, a: Bellum sextum. H3 here, as in the preceding stanza, has a reading which accords with Boccaccio (see variant readings).

66. Thringe, press, push forward; see NED s.v. Thring, vb., 2.

86. Resport, regard; see NED s.v. Resport. The word is used again in 4.850; NED records no other instances of its use.

87. I adopt the reading lefte, since it is supported by Fil. 4.7:

Ma ciò che aveva tutto vi lasciai.

Notes to 4. 57-126

The  $\gamma$  original apparently read lefte (altered by Cl to loste); leeste, the reading of CpH1, seems to be a miswriting of lefte, since leste is not a correct preterite of the verb lose. Chaucer uses either lees (O.E. lēas), or loste (from O.E. weak verb losian). The reading loste of aH4R may be due to los of line 89, and lese of 91. In 92, all authorities read lefte.

96. In hire sherte, i.e. without any of her belongings. The shirt is the irreducible minimum of clothing; compare 3.1099; 4.1522; Legend, B 405; Wife of Bath's Tale, D 1186.

104. In Fil. 4.10, Calchas refers to himself as "questo vecchio cattivo, Che d'ogni altro sollazzo è voto e privo."

106-107. Fil. 4.10 reads:

Qui son con voi di nobili baroni
Troiani, ed altri assai, cui voi cambiate
Con gli avversarii, pe' vostri prigionii.

According to Boccaccio, Fil. 4.2-3, many prisoners were taken along with Antenor; but see note to 4.50-4.

114-117. Calchas is an accomplished magician (cf. 1.71-6), who practises various arts of divination. He interprets the oracular responses of Apollo; he is an astrologer; he practises casting of lots ("sort"); he understands augury, i.e. divination from the flight and chirping of birds. For a succinct account of the various branches of magic, see Isidore of Seville, Etymol., Lib. 8, Cap. 9. One may further consult the index of Thorndike, History of Magic.

120-126. According to Benoit, Troie 25920-3, Neptune built the walls of Troy, and Apollo consecrated them. (Guido omits this statement.) Benoit says nothing of the withheld wages. Homer, Iliad 21.441-57, tells how Apollo and Neptune were forced by Jupiter to serve King Laomedon (father of Priam) for a year in return for promised hire. Neptune built the walls of the city; Apollo tended the king's cattle. At the end of the year, Laomedon refused to pay their hire; and they departed angry against the king and against Troy. In Hyginus, Fab. 89, the story is briefly told with the statement: "Neptunus et Apollo dicuntur Trojam muro cinxisse." See also Servius, Comm. in Aen. 2.610: "Neptunus cum Apolline Troiae fabricati sunt muros"; and compare Boccaccio, Gen. Deorum, Lib. 6, Cap. 6.

Troilus & Criseyde

137-138. Calchas asks that an exchange be made of King Thoas and Criseyde for the Trojan Antenor, held by the Greeks. In Fil. 4.12-17, there is no mention of Thoas; Criseida is exchanged on even terms for Antenor. Chaucer has supplemented his Italian source by an appeal to more ultimate authority. In Benoit, Troie 13079-120, an exchange is made of Thoas and Antenor; and at the same time Priam freely grants that Briseida be sent to her father. Guido says, Historia sig. i 1, b, col. 1: Bellum sextum: "Sed rex Priamus ad petitionem Graecorum inter commutationem Anthenoris et regis Thoas Breseidam Graecis voluntarie relaxavit."

143. Chaucer is translating Fil. 4.13:

onde un parlamento
Di ciò si tenne.

In Benoit, Priam and the Greek princes both assemble "a parlement." Guido uses the word "consilium." Perhaps, as Skeat suggested, the phrase "his parlement" gives to Chaucer's line the more specific idea of a legislative body. Compare 4.217.

167. Iblowe, published, proclaimed; see NED s.v. Blow, vb., 1, 13, and compare 1.384.

176-196. This interposition of Hector has no counterpart in Filostrato. The suggestion for it probably came from 1.106-26, which is based on Fil. 1.12-14.

186. Compare 4.203 and note.

197-201. Compare Juvenal, Sat. 10.2-4:

pauci dignoscere possunt
Vera bona atque illis multum diversa, remota
Erroris nebula.

200. Globe adopts the reading of R, lettyth hem, hinders them; compare Merchant's Tale, E 1573. Note the reading of H3Cx. Neither the MS. testimony, nor the passage of Juvenal which Chaucer is paraphrasing, permits us to decide whether we have a form leten, laten (O.E. lætan) or of letten (O.E. lettan). I have followed the authority of Jy in reading lat hem nat, permits them not.

203-205. Antenor and Aeneas persuaded Priam to treat with the Greeks for peace, and, having entered into treasonable negotiations with the Greeks, delivered to them the Palladium. The loss of this sacred relic led the way to the destruction of Troy. See Benoit, Troie 24397-5713, and Guido, Historia sig. m 1, a, col. 1—sig. m 4, a, col. 1 : Proditio Troiae. Compare also Duchess 1119-20.

210. Here and howne. This phrase, though the reading is clearly attested by the MSS., remains an unsolved problem of Chaucerian lexicography. The context suggests that it means something like "one and all," "persons of high estate and low"; but neither the phrase nor its constituent words can be identified. Skeat's very cautious suggestion that here is O.E. hēore, gentle (see NED s.v. Here, adj.) and howne a development of "an A.S. Hūna, which may mean a Hun, a savage" is not satisfactory. There is an O.N. hūn, which means a "young bear," and hence metaphorically "urchin, boy"; and one might conceivably refer here to O.N. herra, lord, master. But this suggestion is as unconvincing as Skeat's. H5 and Cx present bungling attempts at emendation.

215. Note variant readings. The reading But of a was apparently revised to That; but the alteration in the MS. seems to have resulted in illegibility. And is a substitution of the γ original. What of JRH3 is a misreading influenced by the succeeding what.

217. Substaunce, majority; see NED s.v. Substance, 15.

225-227. These lines are imitated from Dante, Inf. 3.112-14:

Come d'autunno si levan le foglie
L'una appresso dell'altra, infin che il ramo
Vede alla terra tutte le sue spoglie.

Dante uses the simile to describe the damned on the shores of Acheron. His lines are modelled on Virgil, Aen. 6.309-12.

229. A rather violent extension of the preceding simile. Troilus, bereft of the leaves of happiness, is like the naked tree in winter, his life closed in by the black bark of care.

239-241. Chaucer's simile follows closely Fil. 4.27. Boccaccio, in his turn, is imitating Dante, Inf. 12.22-4:

Qual è quel toro che si slaccia in quella
Che ha ricevuto già il colpo mortale,
Che gir non sa, ma qua e là saltella.

Dante is in turn indebted to Virgil, Aen. 2.222-4.

Troilus & Criseyde

246. From Fil. 4.28:

I miseri occhi per pietà del core,

i.e. his eyes wept out of compassion for his broken heart. The form piete (three syllables), though found only in JH2S1, seems clearly right. The reading of his herte I take to be a scribal attempt to repair the metre broken by the corruption of piete into pite.

247. The a reading is closer to the Italian "parean due fontane," Fil. 4.28.

251-252. Compare Clerk's Tale, E 902-3:

Curseth the day and tyme that nature
Shoop him to been a lyves creature.

Lyves is gen. sing. of life used attributively as equivalent to living; see NED s.v. Life, 15, b. Compare Merchant's Tale, E 1864, and Gower, Conf. Am. 4.382.

263. H1 has marginal gloss: "Sine causa."

260-287. The references to Fortune in this passage are found also in the corresponding stanzas of Filostrato (4.30-2). They are Boethian commonplaces. Compare 1.837-54; 4.1-9.

271-272. Compare the Monk's definition of tragedy (B 3165-7) as the story—

Of him that stood in greet prosperitee
And is yfallen out of heigh degree
Into miserie, and endeth wrecchedly.

(Compare Boethius, 2. pr 2. 51-2.) Troilus recognizes that he is a tragic figure; compare 5.1786; 1.4 and note. The present passage looks like an echo of the lines of the Monk's Prologue. Scholars are inclined to believe that the Monk's Tale was written earlier than Troilus. Perhaps the definition of the Monk's Prologue was taken over from the pre-Canterbury form of the work.

279. Combre-world, one who uselessly encumbers the earth; see NED s.v. Cumber-world.

300-301. Oedipus, horror-stricken at the discovery that he had killed his father and married his mother, tore out his eyes. Compare Statius, Thebais 1.46-52, and Roman de Thèbes 497-500.

Notes to 4. 246-413

See also note on 2.100-8. The reference to Oedipus is not present in the a text; see variant readings.

302. I adopt the reading wery, in spite of the fact that verray has somewhat better MS. attestation; see variant readings. Wery is much better suited to the context, and has the support of Fil. 4.34:

O anima tapina ed ismarrita, where tapina, wretched, corresponds to wery. Wery is also supported by 4.1142. I regard verray as a scribal substitution under the influence of line 288; the corruption, however, was probably present in the original of all the MSS., since Ph reads verrey. Note the reading werray of Gg, which looks like a conflation of the two rival readings.

316. Compare Legend, B 94, where Chaucer applies to the daisy the phrase "lady sovereyne," and B 275, where it is applied to Alcestis. In the corresponding passage of Filostrato (4.36), Troilo addresses Criseida as "o dolce bene."

323-329. This stanza bears a general resemblance to Tes. 11.91.

356-357. Compare Man of Law's Tale, B 608-9:

allas! what mighte she seye?

For verray wo hir wit was al aweye.

Note that aS1Cx read was al aweye in line 357.

381. "If it only were as certainly false as it is (actually) true."

392-393. Compare Boethius, 2. pr 2. 7-9: "And yif thou mayst shewen me [Fortune] that ever any mortal man hath received any of tho thinges to ben hise in propre, than wol I graunte frely that alle thilke thinges weren thyne whiche that thou axest." (Fortune is speaking of riches and dignities.) Compare also 1.843.

407-412. These lines suggest Ovid, Amores 2.4.9-48.

413. The heroner is a falcon specially trained to fly at the heron; see NED s.v. Heroner. For ryvere means "for the sport of hawking," the banks of a river being a particularly favorable place for the sport; see NED s.v. River, sb. 1, 2, and compare Sir Thopas, B 1927:

And ryde an hauking for riveer.

Troilus & Criseyde

414-415. The quotation assigned to "Zanziſ" is from Ovid, Remedia Amoris 462:

Successore novo vincitur omnis amor.

Chaucer is following Fil. 4.49:

E come io udii già sovente dire,
Il nuovo amor sempre caccia l'antico.

Boccaccio gives no definite authority for the quotation. Ovid's line introduces a passage in which it is explained that Atrides consoled himself for the loss of Chryseis by accepting Briseis, slave of Achilles, as a substitute; so that it has a particular (though perhaps fortuitous) appropriateness. Compare also Remedia Amoris 484, the line which ends the exemplum:

Et positast cura cura repulsa nova.

Neither Boccaccio nor Chaucer would have gone so far on the path of anachronism as to let Pandarus mention the name of Ovid. But why Chaucer chose the name "Zanziſ" (compare various readings) as his imaginary authority, has never been explained. In Physician's Tale, C 16, "Zanziſ" (variant reading: Zephirus) is referred to as a painter, along with Apelles. There Chaucer presumably meant Zeuxis. Kittredge notes (Chaucer's Lollius 70, n. 3) that in the Alexander story there is a Zeuxis (not the painter) who was one of Philip's courtiers, and who wrote to Philip to inform him of Alexander's extravagance. Rossetti conjectured that "Zanziſ" resulted from a corrupt reading of Boccaccio's "già sovente" in the lines quoted above.

418. Compare Fil. 4.59:

ma puonne ben cadere
In processo di tempo.

421-424. Compare Fil. 4.59, and Ovid, Remedia Amoris 139-44, 149-50, 205-6, 214-40.

431. *Unthrif*t, folly, wickedness; compare Purity 516, 1728. The Man of Law's tale of Constance is a "thrifty tale" (B 1165).

432-434. Compare Rose (Langlois) 4639-42:

Quant au sarmon seiant m'aguiete,
Par l'une des oreilles giete
Quaque Raison en l'autre bout,
Si qu'ele i pert sa peine toute.

Notes to 4. 414-483

435. A slightly irregular line; he answerde constitutes the third foot. Note that JH4RH1A omit he, a possible reading if line 434 is regarded as parenthetical.

443. Enhabit, a syncopated form of the past participle, enhabited, in the sense of "established in"; see NED s.v. Inhabit, 4. NED cites Act 12 Hen. VII, c. 6: "The Merchauntes Adventurers inhabite and dwelling in divers parties of this Realme of Eng-lond." Chaucer's line corresponds to Fil. 4.50:

A cui son dato, e tutto son di lei.

460-461. These lines are imitated by Usk, Testament of Love 1.2.166-7: "'Ye wete wel, lady, eke,' quod I, 'that I have not played raket, nettil in, docke out, and with the wethercocke waved.'" In the game of racket, two players "strike the ball alternately with their rackets and endeavour to keep it rebounding from a wall" (NED). Line 461 alludes to a "charm uttered to aid the cure of nettle-stings by dock leaves; hence . . . a proverbial expression for changeableness and inconstancy. The charm to be repeated during the rubbing process is: 'Nettle in, dock out, Dock in, nettle out, Nettle in, dock out. Dock rub nettle out'"; see NED s.v. Dock, sb. 1, 3, where several examples of the proverbial phrase are cited. Compare Notes and Queries, (Ser. 1) 3.133.

462. Care is present subjunctive. The failure so to understand it has led the scribes into many vain attempts at emendation; see variant readings.

466. Compare Seneca, Ad Lucilium Ep. 78.13: "Levis est dolor, si nihil illi opinio adiecerit; contra, si exhortari te coeperis ac dicere: 'Nihil est aut certe exiguum est. Duremus; iam desinet'; levem illum, dum putas, facies." See also Boethius, 2. pr 4. 79-82.

468. "Make me into a Stoic," like Seneca, from whom is derived the quotation of line 466.

473-476. Chaucer is here following freely Fil. 4.54. Boccaccio, however, does not mention Proserpine. Compare Fame 1511, where Chaucer cites Claudian's De Raptu Proserpinae. Dante, Inf. 9.44, refers to Proserpine as "regina dell' eterno pianto." With 475-6, compare 4.786-7.

481-483. Why gabbestow, "Why do you talk idly, you who formerly said to me:”. Troilus reminds Pandarus of the words which he had spoken in 3.1625-8.

503-504. Sely, happy, blessed; see NED s.v. Seely. Mod. Eng. silly is the same word with modified meaning. These lines are from Boethius, 1. m 1.12-14: “Thilke deeth of men is weleful that ne cometh not in yeres that ben swete, but cometh to wrecches, often ycleped.”

505-511. A free adaptation of Fil. 4.61.

506. “I would have paid thee money not to slay me.”

511. H4 glosses “cold: mors; hete: vita.” Compare 1.420.

519-520. Compare Rose (Langlois) 6382-3:

Je vei maintes feiz que tu pleures
Come alambic seur alutel.

An alembic is an apparatus formerly used in distilling; its modern equivalent is a retort. All the MSS. give the aphetized form lambyc or lambek; H2H3 omit the indefinite article a.

548. After the first destruction of Troy, Hesione, sister of Priam, was forcibly carried away to Greece by Telamon (Benoit, Troie 2793-804). Priam sent Antenor as ambassador to the Greeks to demand her return (Troie 3187 ff.); but the Greeks refused to surrender her. The rape of Helen by Paris is done as a reprisal for the refusal to give up Hesione (Troie 4059-68). The “ravysshying” of these two women led to the Trojan war.

556. Were Troilus to ask Criseyde openly from his father, the request would be an accusation of her, in that it would reveal the fact that she was his mistress. Fil. 4.69 reads:

Poi penso questo fora un accusarla,
E far palese le cose commesse.

557. Syn, a reduced form of sithen, is here used adverbially in the sense of “in the next place, furthermore”; see NED s.v. Sith, 1 b, and Sithen, 1. Purchase, get possession of, acquire (with no implication of money payment); see NED s.v. Purchase, vb., 4. The whole line corresponds to Fil. 4.69:

Nè spero ancora ch'el dovesse darla.

560. In Fil. 4.69, Troilo adds as a further reason for Priam's refusal—

E perchè la direbbe diseguale
A me, al qual vuol dar donna reale.

Notes to 4. 503-622

585. By note, i.e. in musical accord; see NED s.v. Note, sb. 2, 3 c.

588. A proverb; see NED s.v. Nine, 3 a and 4 b, for examples.

594. The  $\gamma a$  reading ifounde is somewhat closer to Fil. 4.72: "innanzi esser ripreso alquanto."

595. A gnat is a recognized type of little value; see NED s.v. Gnat, 1 b. The whole phrase is equivalent to "here sterven as a wrecche" of line 629, below.

600-602. H4 has marginal gloss: "Audaces fortuna juvat etc." Erasmus, Adagia 1.2.45, cites Cicero, Tuscul. Quaest., Lib. 2: "Fortes enim non modo fortuna adjuvat, ut est in veteri proverbio, etc." Compare Virgil, Aen. 10.284: "Audentes Fortuna iuvat." The proverb appears in slightly different form in Legend 1773, and Reeve's Tale, A 4210. Fil. 4.73 reads:

la fortuna aiuta
Chiunque è ardito, e' timidi rifiuta.

607. Of fered, frightened off (or "because of being frightened"); see NED s.v. Fear, vb., 2. But see variant readings.

608-609. In Fil. 4.74, Pandaro gives a different turn to the idea:

Passisene ella come fa Elèna;

i.e. "let her put up with the publicity of her love, just as Helen does."

618. Chaucer is reproducing Fil. 4.75:

Amor promessa non cura; nè fede;

but his language is an echo of that in Knight's Tale, A 1163-8:

Wostow nat wel the olde clerkes sawe,
That "who shal yeve a lover any lawe?"
Love is a gretter lawe, by my pan,
Than may be yeve to any erthly man.
And therefore positif lawe and swich decree
Is broke al-day for love, in ech degree.

The passage in Knight's Tale is a development of Boethius, 4. m 6.37-9. Boccaccio's line may have been suggested by Ovid, Art. Am. 1.631-6.

622. "Bravely venture everything on a single play, even though the odds are against you." The reference is to the game of hazard, of which the American craps is a simplified form. A player throws two dice, and the sum of the numbers which fall is the "main." If the "main" is six, the caster may win by throwing at the next cast either six or twelve. If he throws 2, 3, or 11, he loses. If his second throw is a number other than these, that number becomes his "chance." He continues to throw until he wins by throwing again the "chance," or loses by throwing the "main." If six is the "main" and seven the "chance," probability favors the "caster" at the odds of six to five. The chances are correspondingly against the "setter," who bets against him. To "set" one's all on six and seven is, therefore, to venture with the odds against one. The phrase therefore became a proverbial expression for taking a long chance. Cotgrave, in his Dictionary (1611), s.v. Desesperade, glosses: "louër à la desesperade, to set his whole rest, or set all on sixes, and sevens" (NED). For the later development of the phrase, which is responsible for the modern "To be at sixes and sevens," see NED s.v. Six, B 5. (I cannot agree with the explanation of the origin of the phrase there given.) For other references to the game of hazard, see Cant. Tales, B 125, C 653. Compare also 2.1347.

Troilus & Criseyde

627. In Knigh't's Tale, A 1010, Palamon and Arcite are found lying on the field of Thebes, Thurgh-girt with many a grevous bloody wounde.

630. Spede must be read as two syllables, though we should expect elision. Skeat and Globe read that it recche; but recche does not elsewhere govern a direct object—compare 1.496, 797; 2.338, 434; 4.1447, 1588.

644. Note the a reading But any aungel for But if that Jove. The revision heightens the classical coloring.

659-661. Chaucer is translating closely Fil. 4.78. Boccaccio is in turn imitating Virgil's account of Fame, Aen. 4.188:

Tam ficti pravique tenax quam nuntia veri.

683. For pitous joie translates "tutte piene Di pietosa allegrezza" of Fil. 4.80.

684. "Dear enough, even if one paid only a mite." The same phrase is found in Legend 741. Compare 3.900.

708-714. This stanza is omitted by γ. The omission must be due to a scribal lapse; for the stanza is present in all the other authorities, and corresponds to the first four lines of Fil. 4.84. The remainder of this stanza of the Italian is represented by Chaucer's lines 715-21.

Notes to 4. 627-762

727-728. "As much relief as a man feels if one scratches his heel to cure his headache." The figure is taken over from Fil. 4.85:

e non era altro che grattarla
Nelle calcagne, ove'l capo prudea ;

but in the Italian it is an itching head rather than an aching head. Perhaps Chaucer wrote icche instead of ache; but the MSS. all read ach, ache, or ake, except Gg which reads eche.

736. Ownded, waved, wavy, from O.F. ondé, ultimately derived from Lat. unda, wave; see NED s.v. Oundy, and compare Fame 1386.

745. Criseyde, overwhelmed with sorrow, concludes that she must have been born "in an evil constellation," i.e. at a time when the planets were in unfavorable "houses" and in unfavorable "aspects" one to another. See notes to 2.680-6, and 3.715-17. This meaning of constellation is its older meaning; the modern meaning, a permanent grouping of fixed stars, is first recorded by NED under date of 1551.

750-756. In  $\alpha$ (JGgPhH3) this stanza follows immediately line 735; in  $\beta\gamma$  it is moved down to the position which it occupies in this edition. Moreover,  $\beta\gamma$  has revised the first line of the stanza to accommodate it to its new position, and has similarly revised line 757, which in  $\beta\gamma$  immediately follows the stanza. There can be no doubt that the transposition is deliberate; nor can there be any doubt which position was the original one. In Boccaccio a single stanza, Fil. 4.87, serves as source for the last three lines of stanza 105, for the transposed stanza, and for stanza 106; and the details are found in the same sequence as in the  $\alpha$  text of Chaucer. Stanza 88 of Filostrato corresponds to stanza 107 of Troilus. The  $\beta\gamma$  position of stanza 108 disturbs the order of Boccaccio, by inserting a stanza of Criseyde's words between two stanzas which describe her conduct. It succeeds somewhat better in coordinating words and deeds.

762. Boccaccio does not mention Criseyde's mother, and Benoit is equally silent. Chaucer seems to have taken the name from the story of Thebes, where Argia (Thebais 2.297, and 12. passim) is the wife of Polynices. This Theban "Argyve" is mentioned by Chaucer in 5.1509. Boccaccio's Criseida merely says, Fil. 4.88:

Deh or fuss'io nel nascere affogata.

765. Compare Prologue, A 179-80:

a monk, whan he is cloisterlees,
Is lykned to a fish that is waterlees.

767-768. Compare Boethius, 3. pr 11.75-90.

770. Criseyde says that the phrase "roteles moot grene soone deye" is a "byword," i.e. a proverb. Le Roux de Lincy, 1.83, cites the phrase: "Seiche racine de l'arbre la ruïne."

776. Boccaccio says, Fil. 4.89: "sen va la smarrita Anima fuor del corpo." Chaucer's curious metaphor suggests Dante, Par. 1.20-1:

Si come quando Marsia traesti
Della vagina delle membra sue.

But Dante is referring to the flaying of Marsyas.

778-784. Criseyde will wear the black habit of a nun, who has renounced the world; and the observances of her religious "order" shall be sorrow, lamentation, and abstinence. According to Fil. 4.90 her "vestimento nero" is to be testimony that she is in effect a widow, now that she must be separated from Troilo.

789-791. Compare Ovid, Met. 11.61-6:

Umbra subit terras, et quae loca viderat ante,
Cuncta recognoscit: quaerensque per arva piorum
Invenit Eurydicen, cupidisque amplexitur ulnis.
Hic modo coniunctis spatiantur passibus ambo,
Nunc praecedentem sequitur, nunc praevisus anteit,
Eurydicenque suam iam tuto respicit Orpheus.

Lines 61-64 of this passage are quoted by the scribe in the margin of H4. See also Met. 10.1-85; Virgil, Georg. 4.453-527. Chaucer's "feld of pite" seems to be an adaptation of Ovid's "arva piorum." Perhaps, also, he had run across some etymology which connected Elysium with the Greek ἐλεῖω, to have pity (cf. Kyrie eleison of the Mass). The word Elysium is not, however, etymologized by Isidore of Seville. Note that a reads Ther Pluto regneth for That hight Elisos.

Notes to 4. 765-870

813-819. This stanza follows closely Fil. 4.96. For lines 816-17, however, the Italian has only the single word "scapigliata," dishevelled. In 4.87, occurs the line:

E i biondi crin tirandosi rompea; compare above 4.736-7. Guido, in his account of Briseida's grief at her departure from Troy, Historia, sig. i 2, a, col. 2: Bellum sextum, says: "aureos crines suos a lege ligaminis absolutos a lactea sui capitis cute divellit." There is no corresponding phrase in Benoit (see Troie 13261-322). But dishevelled hair is a commonplace of grief; compare Filocolo 1.188.

818. That martire, though attested only by H<sub>2</sub>H<sub>4</sub>, is the correct reading is established by Fil. 4.96:

Dar vero segno degli aspri martiri.

Boccaccio rhymes martiri with disiri; so that Chaucer has taken over not only the word but the rhyme. The reading matere fits neither sense nor rhyme. Note, however, that CpJRDS<sub>1</sub> give the form matire. For matire as a variant of the normal matere see Canon's Yeoman's Tale, G 770.

829. Cause causyng. Criseyde is translating the logical term "causa causans," i.e. primary, original cause, as opposed to "causa causata," a secondary cause.

836. H<sub>4</sub> has marginal gloss: "Extrema gaudiij luctus." The quotation is from Proverbs 14.13: "Risus dolore miscebitur, et extrema gaudii luctus occupat." The same text is quoted by Chaucer in Man of Law's Tale, B 424, and Nun's Priest's Tale, B 4395.

841-847. Cummings (p. 73) points out that this stanza is based on Fil. 4.97. In Boccaccio these lines are spoken by Pandaro to Criseida.

850. Resport, regard; see note to 4.86.

865. Compare Knight's Tale, A 1400-1:

And saugh that chaunged was al his colour,
And saugh his visage al in another kinde.

Chaucer is therè speaking of the love-lorn Arcite.

868. A slightly irregular line; note variant readings.

870. Bytrent, winds around; see 3.1231 and note.

Troilus & Criseyde

880. Fil. 4.102 reads:

E quanto questo sia cosa molesta
A Troilo.

This suggests that moleste is a noun (see NED s.v. Molest, sb.), the direct object of dooth, causes, with Troilus as indirect object.

884. Into litel, within a little, very nearly; see NED s.v. Little, B 8.

887. Fawe, dialectal variant of fayn; see NED s.v. Fain. Fawe is found in Wife of Bath's Prologue, D 220, there also under the rhyme.

910. "Before death completely drive out that spirit which he is assailing in my heart." The goost is apparently the "vital spirit," whose seat is the heart; compare note to 1.306-7. I follow the preponderance of MS. authority, and read he beteth; but see variant readings.

922. "For to what end (death) he would straightway direct his course"; see NED s.v. Pretend, 12.

927. The "flat" of a sword is its broad surface, as opposed to the edge; see NED s.v. Flat, C. 1, b. In Squire's Tale, F 156-65, there is a magic sword which will heal the wounds it has given, if one strokes them with the "platte" of the sword. Chaucer's line clearly means "be to him a cause of healing rather than of injury"; and it is probable that he is alluding to some such magic as that of the Squire's Tale. Achilles had a spear, the wounds given by which could be cured only by applying rust scraped from the spear itself; see Met. 13.171-2. In Remedia Amoris 44-8 Ovid applies the idea to the wounds and healing of the lover. Compare Dante, Inf. 31.4-6:

Così od'io che soleva la lancia
D'Achille e del suo padre esser cagione
Prima di trista e poi di buona mancia.

Scartazzini, in his note on this passage, says that the conceit is much used by "nostri poeti antichi." Dante's "esser cagione" suggests Chaucer's "Beth . . . cause." Compare Squire's Tale, F 239-40.

936. Compare 4.1261-3.

947. I follow CpS1JH3CxTh in reading al allone; scribal omission of the al is a highly probable error.

Notes to 4. 880-973

953-1085. The long discussion of God's foreknowledge in its relation to man's freedom is a close paraphrase of Boethius, 5. pr 3.7-71. In Prose 2, Philosophy has asserted both the doctrine of the liberty of free will and that of God's providence. In Prose 3, Boethius, speaking as a character in the dialogue, replies with a long argument to prove that if God foreknows our actions, these actions cannot proceed from our own free choice, and insists that "the bitydinge of the thing ywist biforn ne may nat ben eschued." This argument Troilus reproduces point by point. In the remainder of Prose 3, Boethius points out certain conclusions which must follow on the denial of free will. The reply of Philosophy is contained in Proses 4-6. She resolves the conflict by declaring that necessity is of two sorts: simple necessity, which cannot be avoided, and conditional necessity. The necessity which derives from God's foreknowledge is of the second sort. If God foreknows that a man will do a certain thing, he will necessarily do it; but the man's action is free, and is not constrained by God's foreknowledge of the choice that he will freely make. It is this reply of Philosophy (in Prose 4) that underlies the playful discussion of the same problem in Nun's Priest's Tale, B 4424-40. On the whole question of Chaucer's interest in this much disputed question, see B. L. Jefferson, Chaucer and Boethius, 71-80.

This long soliloquy was not present in Chaucer's earliest draft of the poem. For a full discussion of the matter, see Intro., pp. lxxi-lxxii.

958-959. These lines state the thesis which Troilus sets out to prove. Compare Boethius, 5. pr 4.47-8: "It bihoveth first to shewen, that nothing ne bitydeth that it ne bitydeth by necessitye." It was the destiny of Troilus to be lost.

960-966. Boethius, 5. pr 3.7-10: 'For yif so be that god loketh alle thinges biforn, ne god ne may nat ben desseived in no manere, than mot it nedes been, that alle thinges bityden the whiche that the purviaunce of god hath seyn biforn to comen.' Troilus makes a specific application to his own case.

967-973. The argument is interrupted while Troilus bewails the fact that doctors disagree. Compare Nun's Priest's Tale, B 4424-9:

But what that god forwoot mot nedes be,
After the opinioun of certeyn clerkis.

Troilus & Criseyde

Witnesse on him, that any perfit clerk is,
That in scole is gret altercacioun
In this matere, and greet disputisoun
And hath ben of an hundred thousand men.

Among the great clerks who assert the power of destiny, are Cicero in his De Divinatione, and Bishop Bradwardine (1290?-1349) in his De Causa Dei (cf. N.P.T., B 4432). The orthodox doctrine of "fre ehóis" is upheld by St. Augustine in De Civitate Dei, Lib. 5, Cap. 8-12 (cf. N.P.T., B 4431) and by Boethius. Pandarus cites a similar disagreement of authorities in support of his conviction (5.360-85) that no reliance is to be placed on dreams.

974-980. Boethius, 5. pr 3.10-12: "For which, yif that god knoweth biforn nat only the werkes of men, but also hir conseiles and hir willes, thanne ne shal ther be no libertee of arbitre." Chaucer expands freely.

981-987. Boethius, 5. pr 3.12-17: "ne, certes, ther ne may be noon other dede, ne no wil, but thilke which that the divyne purviaunce, that may nat ben desseived, hath feled biforn. For yif that they mighten wrythen away in othre manere than they ben purveyed, than sholde ther be no stedefast prescience of thing to comen."

988-994. Boethius, 5. pr 3.17-19: "but rather an uncertein opinioun; the whiche thing to trowen of god, I deme it felonye and unleveful."

995-1001. Boethius, 5. pr 3.22-6: "For, certes, they seyn that thing nis nat to comen for that the purviaunce of god hath seyn it biforn that is to comen, but rather the contrarye: . . . that, for that the thing is to comen, therfore ne may it nat ben hid fro the purviaunce of god." In 996, the reference is to the tonsure of clerks.

1002-1008. Boethius, 5. pr 3.26-9: "and in this manere this necessitee slydeth ayein into the contrarye partye: ne it ne bihoveth nat, nedes, that thinges bityden that ben purveyed, but it bihoveth, nedes, that thinges that ben to comen ben ypurveyed."

1009-1015. Boethius, 5. pr 3.30-4: "but as it were ytravailed, as who seyth, that thilke answeere procedeth right as thogh men travaileden, or weren bisy to enqueren, the whiche thing is cause of the whiche thing:—as, whether the prescience is cause of the necessitee of thinges to comen, or elles that the necessitee of thinges to comen is cause of the purviaunce."

1016-1022. Boethius, 5. pr 3.35-9: "But I ne enforce me nat now to shewen it, that the bitydinge of thinges ywist biforn is necessarie, how so or in what manere that the ordre of causes hath itself; althogh that it ne seme nat that the prescience bringe in necessitee of bitydinge to thinges to comen."

1019. Byforn is to be read as three syllables with syllabic r.

1023-1029. Boethius, 5. pr 3.39-41: "For certes, yif that any wight sitteth, it bihoveth by necessitee that the opinioun be sooth of him that coniecteth that he sitteth; and ayeinward also is it of the contrarye." See, seat; see NED s.v. See, sb. 1. Conjectest translates the Latin: "quae eum sedere coniectat veram esse." Line 1027 is probably the least poetical line that Chaucer ever wrote.

1030-1036. Boethius, 5. pr 3.41-5: "Yif the opinioun be sooth of any wight for that he sitteth, it bihoveth by necessitee that he sitte. Thanne is heer necessitee in that oon and in that other: for in that oon is necessitee of sittinge, and, certes, in that other is necessitee of sooth."

1037-1043. Boethius, 5. pr 3.45-51: "But therfore ne sitteth nat a wight, for that the opinioun of the sittinge is sooth; but the opinioun is rather sooth, for that a wight sitteth biforn. And thus, althogh that the cause of the sooth cometh of that other syde (as who seyth, that althogh the cause of sooth comth of the sitting, and nat of the trewe opinioun), algates yit is ther comune necessitee in that oon and in that other." Troilus, alone in the temple, imagines himself as engaged in a discussion with an opponent. Note that line 1038 is hypermetrical.

1044-1050. Boethius, 5. pr 3.51-3: "Thus sheweth it, that I may make semblable skiles of the purviaunce of god and of thinges to comen."

1051-1057. Boethius, 5. pr 3.53-8: "For althogh that, for that thinges ben to comen, therfore ben they purveyed, nat, certes, for that they ben purveyed, therfore ne bityde they nat. Yit natheles, bihoveth it by necessitee, that either the thinges to comen ben ypurveyed of god, or elles that the thinges that ben purveyed of god bityden."

1058-1064. Boethius, 5. pr 3.58-62: "And this thing only suf-fisheth ynough to destroyen the freedom of oure arbitre, that is to seyn, of oure free wil. But now, certes, sheweth it wel, how fer fro the sothe and how up-so-down is this thing that we seyn, that the bitydinge of temporel thinges is cause of the eterne prescience."

1065-1071. Boethius, 5. pr 3.62-5: "But for to wenen that god purvyeth the thinges to comen for they ben to comen, what other thing is it but for to wene that thilke thinges that bitidden whylom ben causes of thilke sovereign purvyaunce that is in god?"

1072-1078. Boethius, 5. pr 3.66-71: "And herto I adde yit this thing: that, right as whan that I wot that a thing is, it bihoveth by necessitee that thilke selve thing be; and eek, whan I have knowe that any thing shal bityden, so byhoveth it by necessitee that thilke thing bityde:—so folweth it thanne, that the bitydinge of the thing ywist biforn ne may nat ben eschued."

1078. After stanza 154, is found in J, written in a contemporary hand, probably that of the scribe: "her faileth thyng y'/is nat yt made." See further, Introd., p. lxxii, n. 149.

1079-1085. Troilus has completed his argument; but he is not sure of his conclusion, that all things come by necessity. Jove alone knows the truth of the matter. May Jove save him and Criseyde from distress! Chaucer has utilized only the first half of the long Prose 3 of Book V. Boethius gives one more argument to prove that things betide by necessity—the impiety of supposing that there can be any uncertainty in God's foreknowledge, an argument already implied in what has gone before—and then considers certain logical consequences, such as the absurdity of prayer, which proceed from the conclusion. With these consequences Troilus has no immediate concern. With lines 1079-80, compare Gower, Conf. Am. Prol. 534: "God wot of bothe which is soth."

1086. The first line of Pandar's speech echoes line 1079, spoken by Troilus. Since stanza 156 was apparently written before stanza 155 (see Introd., p. lxxii), the echo is actually the other way around. For the rhyme of trone, which should normally have open o with doone, and in the preceding stanza with sone, see Wild, p. 215.

1088. With this line, Chaucer turns back to Fil. 4.109, a stanza the first line of which is reproduced by Chaucer in 4.946. From here to the end of Book IV, Chaucer follows, with a few additions, the remaining stanzas of Boccaccio's fourth canto.

1094. Ferd is past participle of the weak verb feren (O.E. fēran). O.E. fēran is a secondary derivative of the strong verb faran, which appears as faren in 4.1087. For the confusion and ultimate coalescence of these two verbs in modern English, see NED s.v. Fare, vb. 1.

1098. Compare 2.1347 and note.

1105-1106. "It is time enough to offer one's neck to the executioner, when one's head must really come off."

1116. The invocation of Juno is not found in Filostrato.

1137. Ligne aloes is an adaptation of Latin lignum aloes, where aloes is gen. sing. of aloe; see NED s.v. Lign-aloes. The aloe is a drug proverbial for its bitterness; see NED s.v. Aloe, 4.

1138-1139. The story of Myrrha, who, metamorphosed into a myrrh tree, wept tears of precious gum, which distilled through its bark, is told by Ovid, Met. 10.298-502. The scribe of H4 quotes in the margin lines 500-1:

Flet tamen, et tepide manant ex arbore gutte.

Est honor et lacrimis stillataque cortice mirra.

(Et in the second of these lines is a corruption of the preposition e.)

1142-1143. Fil. 4.116 reads:

Ma poscia che gli spiriti affannati,
Per l'angoscia del pianto e de'sospiri,
Furon nelli lor luoghi ritornati.

By spiriti, Boccaccio seems to mean the spiritus which control the various functions of the body (see notes to 1.306-7; 4.910). Recovering from the weariness caused by anguish, each of the three spiritus returned to its proper place: the "vital spirit" to the heart, the "natural spirit" to the liver, the "animal spirit" to the brain. Chaucer, though familiar with these physiological ideas, interprets Boccaccio's spiriti as meaning the souls of the two grief-stricken lovers. Compare 4.1152 and note; the line of Boccaccio quoted there seems to have determined Chaucer's understanding of the present passage.

Troilus & Criseyde

1152. Woful spirit is equivalent to woful weri goost of line 1142. Fil. 4.117 reads:

Ed ingegnossi l'alma di fuggirsi.

His propre place echoes line 1143. Compare note to 4.1142-3.

1159. Fil. 4.117 reads: "E gli occhi suoi velati," "and her eyes veiled, i.e. closed." Chaucer's line seems to mean that in her swoon Criseyde's eyes were rolled upwards, so that only the whites were visible. I suspect that Chaucer's copy of Filostrato read levati for velati. (In the Paris ed. this stanza, 6.9, is so different from the Moutier text that there is no equivalent for the words here quoted.)

1174. Compare Prologue, A 301:

And bisily gan for the soules preye.

Chaucer's line has no counterpart in Boccaccio.

1179. Preignant, urgent, compelling, from O.F. preignant, ultimately Latin premere, press; see NED s.v. Pregnant, adj. 1. The word was early confused with pregnant, with child. Fil. 4.119 reads: "vero argomento."

1181. Woon, hope, resource; see Bradley-Stratmann s.v. Wân.

1187-1188. Fil. 4.120 reads:

Acciocchè il suo spirto seguitasse
Quel della donna con sì trista sorte,
E nell'inferno con lei abitasse.

Rossetti explains that inferno means only Hades; but Chaucer has preferred to soften the idea. Minos is the judge who passes judgment on the souls of the dead; see Virgil, Aen. 6.431-3, and Dante, Inf. 5.4-6. In Inf. 13.94-6, Minos judges the souls of suicides.

1192. From Fil. 4.121:

O crudel Giove, e tu fortuna ria.

1205. The reading I leve in wo, I leave behind me in wo, though given only by CISIDR, is established as correct by Fil. 4.123:

E tu città, la qual'io lascio in guerra.

The corrupt substitution of lyve for leve must have been present in the original MS.

Notes to 4. 1152-1374

1208. Atropos is the third of the three Fates. She cuts the thread of life (cf. 4.1546), and so makes ready the funeral bier. H4 glosses: "Antropos: mors."

1216. I adopt the reading Cipride, though found only in JPhH2S1 (but note Enpride of A), because transcriptional probability is on the side of the less familiar name. Note also that H4, which reads Cupide, glosses the name "Venus." Cipride is the Cyprian Venus; compare 3.725; 5.208.

1221-1222. From Fil. 4.124:

e l'anima smarrita
Tornò al core, onde s'era fuggita.

1237. A forlong wey, as long a time as it takes one to walk a furlong (an eighth of a mile); compare Miller's Tale, A 3637.

1241. An irregular line; perhaps the diphthong of Slayn is to be stretched into two syllables. GgR read slawe.

1245. Morter, "a bowl of wax or oil with a floating wick, and later a kind of thick candle, used especially as a night-light" (NED s.v. Mortar, sb. 1, 2). Gg substitutes the word percher, a tall candle; see NED s.v. Percher, sb. 2.

1255-1257. Compare 1.704-7, 762-3.

1261-1263. "As a woman, I speak without delay what comes suddenly to my mind"; compare 4.936.

1291. Mocioun, inclination, desire; see NED s.v. Motion, sb. 9. (But NED cites this passage, wrongly I think, under meaning 7.)

1305-1306. These lines bear a certain resemblance to Rose (Langlois) 2601-2, where Amors is comforting the lover:

E plus en gré sont receü
Li bien don l'en a mal eü.

1321. The MSS. strongly favor erst; only CpH1H2 read erste. Perhaps the r of erst is to be given syllabic value.

1345-1349. From Fil. 4.131.

1356. The simile of the bees is found also in Summoner's Prologue, D 1693, and in 2.193.

1373-1374. "People say that it is hard to have the wolf full and the sheep whole." This seems to be a proverb; but I have not been able to find any other instance of it. Its purport is similar to "You cannot have your cake and eat it." Its application seems to be that Calchas, in order to satiate his own wolvisch greed, will let Criseyde go back to Troy, and so will lose her.

1377. Grave, engrave, make an impression on; compare 2.1241.

1401-1407. This passage, which has no counterpart in Boccaccio, somewhat resembles words actually spoken by Briseida to her father in Benoit and Guido. Briseida is reproaching him for his treachery to the city. In Troie 13768-9 she says:

Trop i mesfist dant Apollin,
Se il tel respons vos dona.

In Historia, sig. i 3, a, col. 1: Bellum sextum, this becomes: "Sane deceperunt te Appollinis falsa responsa."

1406. Amphibologies, ambiguous sentences; see NED s.v. Amphibology. NED records no other instance of the word in English earlier than 1552. Chaucer has adapted a late Latin word. Cicero, De Div. 2.56.116, uses amphibolia in speaking of an oracular response.

1408. H4 has marginal gloss: "Timor invenit deos." Statius, Theb. 3.661, says: "Primus in orbe deos fecit timor." Statius took the phrase from Petronius (Fragm. 27). It was doubtless already a commonplace.

1411. According to Benoit, Troie 5817-927, Calchas had been sent by the Trojans to consult the oracle at "Delfos." He there met Achilles, who with Patroclus was consulting the oracle on behalf of the Greeks. Warned by the oracle of the fall of Troy, Calchas returned with Achilles to Athens, and threw in his lot with the Greeks. See also Guido, Historia, sig. e 6, a, cols. 1, 2: Principium Idolatriae.

1415-1421. Chaucer has abundant authority for his statement. See Fil. 5.7. With line 1419 compare Benoit, Troie 13495-7:

La danzele cuide morir,
Quant de celui deit departir
Qu'ele tant aime e tant a chier.

See also Guido, Historia, sig. i 2, a, col. 2: Bellum sextum.

1429-1435. This stanza follows closely Fil. 4.138.

1450-1454. Deere from O.E. dēore, and yfeere from O.E. gefēre, have long close e; the rhyme words in 1451, 1453, 1454 have open e.

Notes to 4. 1377-1540

1453-1454. "The trained bear thinks one thing, but the bear-leader has other plans." I have not been able to identify this proverb, which is equivalent, on a lower scale, to "Man proposes, God disposes."

1457-1458. "It is hard to sham lameness before a cripple, without being detected; for he knows the art of limping." Le Roux de Lincy, 1.211, cites a fifteenth century proverb: "Clochier ne faut devant boiteux." Compare Düringsfeld, 1. no. 736.

1459. Compare Ovid, Met. 1.625:

Centum luminibus cinctum caput Argus habebat.

1473. Alose, praise; see NED s.v. Alose, vb.

1478-1482. Chaucer is expanding Fil. 4.142:

E mostreratti che stare assediata
È dubbio di venire a rio partito.

It is possible that he turned also, as Hamilton (p. 111) thinks, to Benoit, Troie 13803-9, or to Guido, Historia, sig. i 3, a, col. 1: Bellum sextum.

1505. In the Aristotelian philosophy of the schoolmen, the "substance" is the essential nature of a thing, which underlies the appearances or "accidents" by which we perceive it. Compare Pardoner's Tale, C 539. In the sacrament of the altar, the "substance" bread becomes the "substance" corpus Christi; but the "accidents," such as color, taste, texture, remain unchanged. "It is folly to lose the essential for the non-essential." But, as the next stanza shows, Troilus is playing also with the more popular meaning of accident. "It is folly to give up certainty (sikernes) for uncertainty."

1522. Compare 4.96 and note.

1538-1540. Athamas, king of Thebes, was driven mad by Juno, who brings Tisiphone from hell to haunt him. In his madness, he brutally murdered his own son. See Ovid, Met. 4.416-562, and compare in particular "Saturnia Iuno" of line 448. But Chaucer's mention of Athamas was probably suggested by Dante, Inf. 30.1-12, where "Atamante," driven mad by Juno, is a type of the "falsitori" who dwell in the tenth "bolgia" of the eighth circle. Criseyde prays that Juno may condemn her to hell, mad as Athamas, if she is ever false to Troilus.

Troilus & Criseyde

Styx is properly a river, not a pit; but Dante, Inf. 7.106, calls it "una palude." H4 has marginal gloss: "Stix puteus infernalis."

1543-1545. Compare Ovid, Met. 1.192-3:

Sunt mihi semidei, sunt rustica numina, nymphae
Faunisque satyrique et monticolae Silvani.

See also Met. 6.392-4, and Statius, Theb. 4.683-4.

1546. Atropos breaks the fatal thread of life; compare 4.1208; 3.733-5, and see Rose (Michel) 20702-3:

Mes Atropos ront et descire
Quunque ces deus puéent filer.

H4 has marginal gloss: "Parcas, Cloto, Lathesis, Antropos."

1548-1553. Criseyde's promise that, when she is false to Troilus, the river Simois will flow backward to its source, is a blending of two passages of Ovid. Compare Amores 1.15.10:

Dum rapidas Simois in mare volvet aquas;

and Her. 5.29-30:

Cum Paris Oenone poterit spirare relictā,
Ad fontem Xanthi versa recurret aqua.

The passage from Heroides is reproduced in Rose (Langlois) 13225-8. Both Xanthus and Simois are mentioned in Her. 13.53. Simois is mentioned by Virgil, Aen. 1.100. Neither river is mentioned by Benoît.

1568. Compare Proverbs of Hending, st. 33: "Oft rap reweth," and Gower, Conf. Am. 3.1625:

Men sen alday that rape reweth.

Hazlitt, p. 20, cites the proverb: "A hasty man never wants woe." See 1.956 and note.

1584. Compare Franklin's Tale, F 773-5:

Paciencie is a heigh vertu, certeyn;
For it venquisseth, as thise clerkes seyn,
Thinges that rigour sholde never atteyne.

Compare also Piers Plowman, B 13.135: "Pacientes vincunt," and ibid., C 14.202-6. In his note on Franklin's Tale, Skeat quotes the proverb: "Vincit qui patitur," and cites Dionysius Cato, Distich. 1.38, Virgil, Aen. 5.710. Le Roux de Lincy, 2.407,

Notes to 4. 1543-1594

cites a fifteenth century proverb: "Qui seuffre, Il vainct." The proverb is quoted and elaborated by Machaut, Dit dou Lyon 2040-76. (Line 2071 reads: "Et se dit on: 'Qui sueffre, il veint.'") 1585. "Whoever wishes to have a dear thing must give up a dear thing." Hazlitt, p. 340, cites a proverb from Heywood: "Nought lay down, nought take up." Compare 4.1611-12.

1586. This familiar proverb appears also in Knight's Tale, A 3042, and Squire's Tale, F 593. See Düringsfeld, 1. no. 139. The proverb is at least as old as St. Jerome (In Rufinum 3.2), See also Boccaccio, Tes. 12.11, and Rose (Langlois) 14015-16.

1587-1589. From Fil. 4.154:

Dunque prendi conforto, e la fortuna
Col dare il dosso vinci e rendi stanca;
Non soggiacette a lei giammai nessuna
Persona in cui trovasse anima franca.

Compare also Fortune 8, 16, 24:

For fynally, Fortune, I thee defye.

1590-1596. Criseyde promises that, before the Moon has passed from Aries, where it now is, through Taurus, Gemini, and Cancer to the end of Leo, she will return. As the Moon completes the circuit of the twelve signs in about twenty-eight days, it would travel from about the twentieth degree of Aries to the end of Leo in ten days. Chaucer has already placed the season of Criseyde's departure at the time of year when the Sun is "upon the brest of Hercules lyoun" (4.32). It follows that as soon as the Moon has passed out of Leo, it will be visible as a crescent. Criseyde's promise implies, then, that she will return before the next new Moon; and Troilus so understands it (5.652-8). In Boccaccio, there is at this point no mention of the Moon; Criseida merely promises: "al decimo giorno Senza alcun fallo qui farò ritorno" (Fil. 4.154). Later (Fil. 5.69), Troilo translates the promise into terms of lunar progress, though without specifying which zodiacal signs are concerned.

1591. Compare Franklin's Tale, F 1045:

Your blisful suster, Lucina the shene.

The relation of Diana and Apollo is a commonplace.

1594. Chaucer has given to Juno the title, "Regina caeli," applied to the Blessed Virgin.

Troilus & Criseyde

1608. Cinthia is the Moon; compare 5.1018, and Ovid, Met. 2.465. Criseyde has already (4.1591-3) made the Moon surety for her return. Compare Romeo and Juliet 2.2.109-11.

1611-1612. From Fil. 4.159:

L'aspettar tempo è utile talvolta
Per tempo guadagnare.

1620. From Fil. 4.158:

Ch'el me ne piange l'anima nel core.

1628. Compare Hazlitt, p. 540: "Who may hold that will away?," and Le Roux de Lincy, 2.336: "L'on doit laisser aller ce que l'en ne peut tenir."

1645. Compare Ovid, Her. 1.12:

Res est solliciti plena timoris amor.

1667-1682. These lines follow closely Fil. 4.164-6; but in Boccaccio these stanzas are spoken by Troilo to Criseida.

1682. Remuable Fortune translates "mobile fortuna" of Fil. 4.166.

NOTES TO BOOK FIVE

NOTES TO BOOK FIVE

1. Compare Tes. 9.1 :

Già s'appressava il doloroso fato.

3-7. H4 has marginal gloss: "Parkas, Cloto, Lathesis, Antropos." The idea that the Fates are ministers for the execution of Jove's decrees is to be traced to Boethius, 4. pr 6. 29-56. Lachesis is the second of the Fates, who presides over the continuance of man's life, as Clotho over its beginning, and Atropos over its end. Compare Rose (Michel) 20701 :

E Lachesis qui les filz tire.

See note on 3.733-5. The form Lathesis is found in all the MSS.; Cx and Th emend to Lachesys. MS. confusion of c and t is of frequent occurrence.

8-11. Closely imitated from Tes. 2.1 :

Il sole avea due volte dissolute
Le nevi agli alti poggi, ed altrettante
Zefiro avea le frondi rendute
Ed i be' fiori alle spogliate piante, Poichè. . . .

In H4, goldetressed is glossed "auricomus"; and the closely related H2 reads: The Auricomus tressed Phebus. Compare Valerius Flaccus, Argonauticon 4.92: "Sol auricomus, cingentibus Horis." (Other MSS. of Argonauticon read auricomis.) There had been three spring seasons since Troilus first loved Criseyde. See Introd., p. xxxiv.

9. I adopt shene, on the attestation of H2H4RS1, as an authentic  $\beta$  reading, though with some misgiving, since the substitution of so obvious a word for the less obvious cleene may be a scribal emendation. Cleene is found only in JPh; but Gg is missing, and the corrupt clere of  $\gamma$ ThH3Cx is apparently derived from cleene. Cleene in the sense of "pure" is a possible reading; and though cleene should normally have open e, whereas grene and queene have close e, we find the rhyme clene: ysene in Franklin's Tale, F 995.

15-88. These lines follow closely Fil. 5.1-13.

15-19. Diomedé and blede have long close e; lede and rede (the latter used in two different meanings, "advise" and "read") have long open e.

22-26. In loore (line 22) and more (line 24) the vowel goes back to O.E. ā, and is therefore a long open o. In forlore, more ("root," line 25), and bifore the tonic vowel goes back to O.E. short open o; but this vowel, in an open syllable, was regularly lengthened. It would seem that in Chaucer's pronunciation some distinction in the quality of these two sets of vowels still persisted. Compare the rhymes of the preceding stanza, and of stanza 32, below.

25. Crop and more, topmost branch and root; see NED s.v. Crop, sb., 4, 5, and More, sb. 1.

37. Hors is apparently to be read with syllabic r.

67. Fil. 5.10 reads:

e compaignia
Le fece infino fuor di tutto il vallo,

"and bore her company till they were entirely outside the wall." Chaucer seems to have misread vallo as valle, valley. R reads wallys for valey; but this agreement with the Italian on the part of a MS. so corrupt in its readings as R is presumably only coincidence. That valey is the correct reading is corroborated by 5.610.

71. Antenor was the Trojan who was to be exchanged for King Thoas and Criseyde; compare 4.137.

89. Creed, Pater Noster, and Hail Mary are the first rudiments of an education. Diomedé is no school-boy.

90. As Rossetti pointed out, Chaucer's statement that Diomedé caught hold of Criseyde's bridle rein seems to rest on a misunderstanding of Boccaccio's "di colei si piglia" (Fil. 5.13), which actually means "he is taken with her, he takes a fancy to her."

92-189. In Boccaccio (Fil. 5.13), Diomedé conducts Criseida to her father's tent without any attempt to pay court to her, deferring his love-making till a later day. Chaucer follows the version of the story given by Benoit (Troie 13529-712). See detailed parallels in following notes. Guido (Historia, sig. i 2, b, col. 1: Bellum sextum) follows Benoit, but condenses the episode into a few short sentences.

Notes to 5. 15-189

98. Le Roux de Lincy, 1.237, quotes a thirteenth century proverb: "Fouz est qui se oblie." See ibid. 1.241, and 2.464: "Mal ovre ki se obblie."

101. Compare 3.87 and note.

106. Compare 5.1149.

115. Herte is the reading of all the authorities except  $\gamma$ Th, which read peyne. But I have found no other examples of the phrase don his herte. Herte may be a scribal anticipation from the next line; but if so, it must have been present in the original of all the manuscripts. The reading of  $\gamma$  seems to be an emendation.

113-116. These lines somewhat resemble Benoit, Troie 13596-610.

122. A nine-syllable line; thaqueyntaunce is to be stressed on first and third syllables. But see variant readings.

124-126. Compare 5.918-21.

151. This, a contraction of this is.

155-158. Compare Benoit, Troie 13591-6:

Mainte pucele avrai veüe
E mainte dame coneüe:
Onc mais a rien ne fis preiere
De mei amer en tel maniere.
Vos en estes la premeraine,
Si sereiz vos la dereraine.

Compare also Troie 13556-8.

164-165. Compare Benoit, Troie 13552-5:

Mais j'ai oï assez parler
Que gent qu'onc ne s'erent veü
Ne acointié ne coneü
S'amoënt mout, ç'avient adès.

176-189. Criseyde's reply to Diomedes reproduces the general tenor of the reply of Briseida in Benoit, Troie 13617-80. Briseida answers discreetly that she is in no mood for love; her heart is too sad ; but if she were to love, she would love no one sooner than Diomede. Compare Guido, Historia, sig. i 2, b, col. 1 : Bellum sextum. Some of the material in this passage of Benoit is utilized by Chaucer in a later speech of Criseyde (5.953-1008).

Troilus & Criseyde

207-210. Fil. 5.17 reads :

El bestemmiava il giorno che fu nato,
E gli dei e le dee e la natura
E'l padre, e chi parola conceduta
Avea che fosse Griseida renduta.

Why Chaucer has introduced precisely the deities mentioned is not clear. Cipride (Venus) is associated with Bacchus and Ceres in Tes. 7.66, a passage used by Chaucer in Parliament 274-7. Bacchus and Ceres, as deities of wine and food, are appropriate servitors of Venus. Apollo had been responsible for the treachery of Calchas, and so ultimately for the present grief of Troilus.

211. I adopt the reading walwith, wallows, of GgH4Cx, supported by waltryth of R, as the form which will best explain the various readings. It is corroborated by Fil. 5.19 :

E sè in qua ed ora in là volgendo.

212. See Virgil, Aen. 6.601, and Georg. 3.38 ; but Ixion and his "immanem rotam" are a commonplace. Compare Boethius, 3. m 12.26.

218-222. For the rhymes, compare 5.15-19 and note. Dere and cleere have long close e ; the vowel in the other rhyme-words is long open e.

218-245. This complaint of Troilus is adapted, with some rearrangement in order, from Fil. 5. 19-25.

223-224. Compare Legend 2186, and Ovid, Her. 10.12 ; but Chaucer is following Fil. 5.20 :

ora abbracciando
Vado il piumaccio.

230. Dowe, give as an endowment ; see NED s.v. Dow, vb. 2.

246-259. The terrifying dreams of Troilus are identical with those of Boccaccio's Troilo (Fil. 5.26-7). Troilus believes (5.317) that they portend his death.

Notes to 5. 207-385

274-280. Closely imitated from Tes. 7.94:

Il ciel tutte le stelle ancor mostrava,
Benchè Febea già palida fosse ;
E l'orizzonte tutto biancheggiava
Nell'oriente, ed eransi già mosse
L'Ore, e col carro, in cui la luce stava,
Giungevano i cavai, vedendo rosse
Le membra del celeste bue levato, Dall'amica Titonia accompagnato.

Compare also Boethius, 2. m 3.1-4. Chaucer has suppressed Boccaccio's reference to the sign Taurus; at this point in the English poem, the Sun is in Leo (4.32).

277. Perhaps for to doone of JH4R should be regarded as an authentic  $\beta$  reading; it would improve an awkward line.

295-322. These directions of Troilus for the conduct of his own funeral rites have no counterpart in Filostrato. Certain details seem to have been suggested by the death of Arcita in Boccaccio's Teseide. Compare Tes. 10.89, where the dying Arcita asks his friends to provide "vittime, legni, ed olocausti," so that Mercury may lead his spirit "in luogo ameno"; and Tes. 10.93-8. In Tes. 11.58, Egeo takes the ashes of Arcita, and places them "in un' urna d' oro"; compare also Tes. 11.69, 90. For other parallels, none of them very striking, see Tes. 11.13, 14, 35, 52, 55, 56, 59, 60. Compare also Knight's Tale, A 2889-966.

304. Pleyes palestral, i.e. games of wrestling. The palaestra was the wrestling school. Compare Tes. 7.27: "mio palestral giuoco."

319. Ascalaphus, son of Acheron and Orphne, was metamorphosed into an owl, "venturi nuntia luctus"; see Ovid, Met. 5.533-50. H4 in margin mistakenly cites "Methomorphoseos ij."

321-322. Mercury is the guide of souls on their way to the lower world; compare 5.1827, and Tes. 10.89, 93-8, where Arcita prays Mercury to conduct his soul to Elysium. See also Virgil, Aen. 4.243.

360-385. In Boccaccio, Pandaro merely asserts that dreams "procedon da malinconia" (Fil. 5.32). Chaucer's Pandarus discusses the question of dreams more fully. His conviction that dreams are not worth a bean is based on the fact that so many different explanations have been given of the cause of dreams. He enumerates four explanations: (1) Priests say that they are sometimes divine revelations, sometimes infernal illusions; (2) doctors say they are the result of our physical condition, e.g. the humor of melancholy; (3) some say that they result from an idea deeply impressed on the mind; (4) others say that the significance of dreams is determined by the season of the year, and by the phase of the Moon. Dame Partlet in Nun's Priest's Tale, B 4112-29, gives only the second of these explanations in defense of her assertion that dreams are nothing but vanity. The explanations of Pandarus are commonplaces of the medieval discussion of dreams; see Thorndike, History of Magic 2.290-302. The curious reader may consult Albertus Magnus, De Somno et Vigilia. Tract II of Book III is entitled "De causis somniorum in nobis." Albert, though admitting that many dreams have a purely physiological cause, and are therefore without significance, believes that some dreams are significant. Compare the following passages: "Dicunt autem isti somnia animarum esse per substantias quae daemones ab eis vocantur: visiones autem per deos corporeos" (3.1.8). "Sic igitur quaedam somnia ab his quae in corpore sunt passionibus et dispositionibus causantur, et ipsa nihil aliud quam talia in corpore existentia significant" (3.2.1). "Actiones ante factae vel pertractatae sunt aliquando causae phantasmatum quae postea apparent in somniis" (3.2.2). See also John of Salisbury, Polycraticus, Lib. 2, Cap. 14-17, and Vincent of Beauvais, Spec. Nat., Lib. 27, Cap. 52-61.

365-368. Compare Rose (Langlois) 18509-12:

Ou se Deus par teus visions
Enveie revelacions,
Ou li malignes esperiz,
Pour metre les genz es periz.
De tout ce ne m'entremetrai.

379. "May good come to old women from dreams"; i.e. let old women concern themselves with dreams. Compare Fame 53:

Wel worthe of this thing grete clerkes.

There also the discussion is about the significance of dreams.

382. Qualm, croaking; see NED s.v. Qualm, sb. 2.

Notes to 5. 365-469

387. Fil. 5.33 reads: "a te stesso perdona."

403. The visit to Sarpedon follows closely Fil. 5.38-49. Chaucer places his residence "nat hennes but a myle"; in Fil. 5.40, the distance is "forse quattromila passi." Sarpedon was king of Licia. With his father, Glaucon, he brought more than 3000 knights to the aid of Priam, to whom he was related by blood. See Benoit, Troie 6685-90; Guido, Historia, sig. f 5, b, col. 2. He was killed by Palamedes in the Twelfth Battle (Troie 18784-818).

409. Jouken, lie at rest like a falcon on its perch; see NED s.v. Jouk, vb. 1.

421. Of fyn force, by absolute necessity; see NED s.v. Fine, adj., 3. A nine-syllable line. The reading fyne is but poorly attested, and seems to have no grammatical justification. Perhaps Chaucer wrote sithen for syn.

445. This line is repeated, with substitution of devyse for recorde, at 5.1321, and, with slight variation, in Merchant's Tale, E 1341. Compare Rose (Langlois) 2965-6:

Cuers ne porroit mie penser
Ne bouche d'ome recenser.

The couplet of Rose is repeated with slight variation in lines (Michel) 21307-8.

455. For the form festeyinge, compare note to 3.1718, and see variant readings.

460. For, because. The conceit of the key which locks the lover's heart is a commonplace. See Rose (Langlois) 2009-10:

E ferma mon cuer si soef
Qu'a grant poine senti la clef.

Langlois in his note on this passage cites Ivain 4632-4, and Perceval 3810. Compare Anelida 323. Chaucer is following Fil. 5.43:

Nelle cui mani amor posto la chiave
Avea della sua vita tapinella.

469. "Fortune intended to glaze his head-covering still better," i.e. to provide him with a hood or cap (see NED s.v. Houve) of glass—a delusive protection. In Piers Plowman, B 20.171 (C 23.172) we read: "And thei gyven hym agayne a glasen houve," where the context suggests that glasen houwe is equivalent to a "delusive hope." Compare also Debate of Body and Soul 245:

Troilus & Criseyde

That thou lovedest me thou lete,
And madest me an houwe of glas.

NED cites Adrian 228 (Legends of the Saints in the Scottish Dialect. Scottish Text Soc.):

þu did nocht ellis, I se now,
Bot to god mad a clasine [= glasine] how.

It is possible that the phrase is associated with the proverb quoted in 2.867-8. Compare also Skeat's note on Monk's Tale, B 3562.

478. Congeyen, dismiss, give leave to go; see NED s.v. Congee, vb. The reading conveien of H2H4, taken over by Cx and Th, is certainly corrupt.

484-485. From Fil. 5.47:

Pandaro allora: Or siam noi per lo fuoco Venuti qui?

If one goes to borrow fire from a neighbor, one will hurry home before the live coals are extinguished. Hazlitt, p. 468, records the proverbial phrase: "To come to fetch fire."

492. Wowke, see note on 5.499.

497. Forward, agreement; see NED s.v. Foreward, sb. 1.

499. Wikes. Beside the O.E. (West Saxon) wucu, week, which is represented by wowke of line 492, there is the Anglian wicu, which results in wike. Why the two dialectal forms should occur only seven lines apart in Chaucer's text it is hard to say; but the evidence of the MSS. strongly supports the two readings. In 4.1278, the form wowke is clearly attested; in 2.430, 1273, the form wyke occurs under the rhyme. For discussion of the forms, see Wild, p. 144.

505. "Hazle-wood" is a term of scornful incredulity; compare 3.890; 5.1174.

507. Refreyden, compare 2.1343 and note.

516. Criseyde is apparently to be read as four syllables; but see variant readings.

531. Spered, shut up, closed; see NED s.v. Spear, vb. 1. The MSS. unanimously support spered rather than sperred (see NED s.v. Spar, vb. 1), the form printed by Skeat.

Notes to 5. 478-644

540-550. This apostrophe to the empty house of Criseyde is elaborated from Fil. 5.53:

Lasso, quanto luminoso
Era il luogo e piacevol, quando stava
In te quella beltà, che'l mio riposo
Dentro dagli occhi suoi tutto portava;
Or se' rimaso oscuro senza lei,
Nè so se mai riaver la ti dei.

The conceit of the ring which has lost its ruby seems to be Chaucer's own.

551-553. Compare Rose (Langlois) 2535-8:

Si te dirai que tu doiz faire
Por l'amor dou haut saintuaire
De quoi tu ne puez avoir aise:
Au revenir la porte baise.

Compare also Filocolo 1.124.

580. The "yonder place" is the palace of Deiphebus.

582-595. These lines are adapted from Fil. 5.56-7.

584. Werreyed, made war upon (O.F. werreier); compare Knight's Tale, A 1544.

599-601. Compare Dante, Inf. 30.1-2:

Nel tempo che Giunone era crucciata
Per Semele contra il sangue tebano.

See also Statius, Theb. 1.11-16, Tes. 3.1; 4.16, and Knight's Tale, A 1329-31.

618. Defet, disfigured, from O.F. defeit, past participle of defaire or desfaire; see NED s.v. Defeit, and compare 5.1219.

626. The final syllable of routhe, protected by caesura, is not elided; but note reading of CLR.

638-644. As Rossetti pointed out, the metaphor of a sea-voyage seems to have been suggested by a false reading of Fil. 5.62, "disii porto di morte," I carry desires of death, which Chaucer apparently translated, "I desire the harbor of death."

641. With wynd in steere, with wind astern; see NED s.v. Steer, sb. 2, 2 d.

644. Charybdis, the whirlpool between Italy and Sicily, which threatened the ship of Aeneas; Virgil, Aen. 3.420-3.

Troilus & Criseyde

648. This line must mean that every night Troilus looked to see whether the new Moon was yet visible; compare note on 5.652-8.

652-658. This stanza follows closely Fil. 5.69. When Criseyde left Troy, the Moon was, according to Chaucer, in Aries (4.1592) and the Sun in Leo (4.32). The Moon was, therefore, in the phase of last quarter, when its waning horns are visible only in the late night and early morning. When it should have passed beyond Leo, its new horns would begin to spring. Compare note on 4.1590-6. It is to be noted that, at the time of Criseyde's expected return, the Moon did not shine bright, as Shakespeare declares that it did (Merchant of Venice 5.1.1).

655. H4 glosses "Latona: luna." Thynne, following Caxton, emends to Lucyna; and Skeat adopts the emendation, comparing 4.1591. But Latona has overwhelming MS. authority. Diana is called "Latonia" in Aen. 9.405; 11.534; Met. 1.696; 8.394. Properly Latona is the mother of Diana and Apollo.

664. H4 has marginal gloss: "Pheton filius solis, methomorphoseos 2~." The story of Phaeton, who drove amiss the cart of his father the Sun, is told by Ovid, Met. 2.1-328.

671-672. Similarly Arcita, standing on the shore of Aegina, and looking towards Athens, fancies that the wind which comes thence is peculiarly soft—Tes. 4.32:

E quasi il vento ch' indi era spirato,
Più ch'altro gli pareva mite e pio,
Ei ricevendol, dicea seco stesso:
Questo fu ad Emilia molto presso.

So, also, Boccaccio himself, addressing Fiammetta in the poem to Filostrato, says: "Quindi ogni aura, ogni soave vento che di colà viene, così nel viso ricevo, quasi il vostro senza niuno fallo abbia tocco: nè è perciò troppo lungo questo mitigamento." Compare also Fil. 5.70.

724. Wepen, past participle of wepen, weep. The historically correct form wopen is found in ClH1R. In wepen, the vowel is analogically levelled to that of the present, and of the strong preterite weep. But side by side with the strong forms, one finds a weak preterite and past participle. In line 725, the MSS. strongly favor the form wep̄te. See variant readings, and compare Wild, p. 310.

741-742. An electuary is "a medicinal conserve or paste, consisting of a powder or other ingredient mixed with honey, preserve, or syrup or some kind" (NED). Compare Cant. Tales, A 426, C 307, E 1809. "It is too late to give medicine when one is carrying the corpse to the grave." Düringfeld, 2. no. 122, cites many versions of this proverb, of which the nearest to Chaucer is the Italian: "Dopo la morte non val medicina."

745-749. According to Cicero, De Inventione 2.53 (160), Prudence has three parts: "Memoria, intellegentia, providentia. Memoria est, per quam animus repetit illa, quae fuerunt; intellegentia, per quam ea perspicit, quae sunt; providentia, per quam futurum aliquid videtur ante quam factum est." Compare Thomas Aquinas, Summa I 2.57.6. Prudence hence is said to have three eyes. Compare Dante, Purg. 29.132, where the Cardinal Virtues follow—dietro al modo

D'una di lor ch'aveva tre occhi in testa.

The fourteenth century commentary of Benvenuto da Imola reads: "prudentia, ch'avea tre occhi in testa, quia respicit praeterita, praesentia, et futura." The same explanation is given by the Ottimo Commento.

757-761. These lines, which have no counterpart in Boccaccio, resemble somewhat a proverb recorded by Düringsfeld, 2. no. 235. The French version of the proverb runs: "Tous se mêlent de donner des avis, un sot est celui qui les tous suit."

763. Suffisaunce, satisfaction, contentment; see NED s.v. Suffisance, 5. Compare Boethius, 2. pr 4.96-101. See also 1.891-3 and note.

769. "Shall slip through her heart like a string without knots."

782. Acove, soothe, coax; see NED s.v. Accoy.

784. See 2.807-8 and note.

790-791. I have not been able to identify this quotation.

799-840. Chaucer interrupts his narrative, which in this part of Book V follows closely the early part of Canto VI of Filostrato, to draw portraits of Diomedes, Criseyde, and Troilus. These portraits are primarily indebted to the Frigu Daretis Ylias of Joseph of Exeter, a poem in six books of Latin hexameters, written near the end of the twelfth century, and based apparently on the prose Dares. A text of this poem, marred by many corrupt readings, is available in the Delphin Classics, where it is given the title: De Bello Trojano. The first book, edited from the Paris MS., is printed by J. J. Jusserand in his thesis, De Josepho Exoniensi vel Iscano, Paris, 1877. The quotations from the poem in the following notes are from my own transcript of the MS. in the Chapter Library of Westminster Abbey. With the matter derived from Joseph, Chaucer has combined details from Benoit and stray hints from Filostrato. For further discussion of the matter, see Intro., p. xxxvi, and my article, "Chaucer's Dares," Mod. Phil. 15.1-22.

799-805. Compare Joseph of Exeter, 4.124-7:

Voce ferox, animo preceps, fervente cerebro,
Audentique ira, validos quadratur in artus
Titides, plenisque meretur Tideia factis;
Sic animo, sic ore fero, sic fulminat armis.

(The Bodleian MS. reads Ardentique.) In J, a corrupt copy of these lines, by the original scribe, is given in the margin of stanza 115: "Voce ferox animo preceps/audentique ira. Validos/quadratur in artus tetides/pleniusque meretur tidea factis/sic animo sic ore fero sic et cetera." Joseph is expanding the portrait of the prose Dares (Cap. 13): "Diomedem fortem, quadratum, corpore honesto, vultu austero, in bello acerrimum, clamoroso, cerebro calido, impatientem, audacem." Compare Benoit, Troie 5211-24, and Guido, Historia, sig. e 2, a, col. 1. Line 804 is based on Fil. 6.33:

Egli era grande e bel della persona,
Giovane fresco e piacevole assai,
E forte e fier siccome si ragiona,
E parlante quant'altro Greco mai.

In the margin of line 805, immediately following the lines from Joseph, the scribe of J has written: "Calidonius heres." In Joseph's poem, 4.349, Diomede is referred to as "Calydonius heros"; perhaps heres is a misreading of heros. Chaucer's line seems, however, to be derived from Fil. 6.24; compare 5.932-5 and note.

Notes to 5. 799-826

806-826. Compare Joseph of Exeter's portrait of Briseis (4. 156-62):

In medium librata statum Briseis heriles
Promit in aspectum vultus, nodatur in equos
Flavicies crinita sinus, umbrequae minoris
Delicias oculus iunctos suspendit in arcus.
Diviciis forme certant insignia morum:
Sobria simplicitas, comis pudor, arida numquam
Poscenti pietas, et fandi gracia lenis.

(In line 157, the Westminster MS. reads affectum; the reading aspectum is from the Bodleian MS.) The intricacies of Joseph's rhetoric may be translated thus: "Balanced in medium stature, Briseis sets forth to view her lordly features. Her hairy yellowness is knotted into equal folds, and her eye lifts into joined arches the delights of lesser shadow [i.e. her eyebrows]. With the riches of her form, strive the marks of character: sober simplicity, a pleasing modesty, a pity never arid for him who asks, and gentle grace of speech."

The scribe of J has quoted these lines, with a few corrupt readings. In the margin of stanza 116: "In medium librata/statum Criseis he/riles promit in affec/tum vultus nodatur/in equos flavicies/crinata"; in the margin of stanza 117: "Umbraque minoris/delicias oculus iunc/tos suspendit in/arcus/divicijs forme cer/tant insigne amorum"; in the margin of stanza 118: "Sobria simplicitas/comis pudor ari/da numquam/poscenti/pietas gracia fandi lenis." In Gg, between lines 819 and 820, the scribe has written:

Versus Sobria simplicitas sonus pudor arida numquam
Versus Poscente poetas gracia fandi lenis.

It is to be noted that J reads Criseis for Briseis. The reading amorum for morum is responsible for Chaucer's love in line 819.

Joseph's portrait is expanded from the portrait of Briseis in the prose Dares (Cap. 13): "Briseidam formosam, non alta statura, candidam, capillo flavo et molli, superciliis junctis, oculis venustis, corpore aequali, blandam, affabilem, verecundam, animo simplici, piam." Benoit reproduces this portrait of Dares in Troie 5275-88; Guido paraphrases Benoit in Historia, sig. e 2, a, col. 2.

Troilus & Criseyde

806. Boccaccio says of Criseida, Fil. 1.27: "Ell' era grande"; and Chaucer in 1.281, following Boccaccio, says:

She nas nat with the leste of hire stature.

In the present passage, Chaucer is following Joseph's "In medium librata statum." Benoit says, Troie 5276:

Ne fu petite ne trop grant;

and Guido, Historia, sig. e 2, a, col. 2: "Nec longa nec brevis."

809-812. In Tes. 7.65, Boccaccio says of the goddess Venus:

Ella avea d'oro i crini, e rilegati
Intorno al capo senza treccia alcuna.

In Joseph's portrait of Briseis, her hair is knotted into equal folds. Benoit and Guido do not mention the lady's coiffure.

813-814. The trait of the joined brows is recorded by Dares, Joseph, Benoit, and Guido; but only Benoit and Guido suggest that this was a defect ("lak"). Benoit says, Troie 5279-80:

Mais les sorcilles li joigneient,
Que auques li mesaveneient.

Antiquity regarded joined eyebrows as beautiful; see articles by G. P. Krapp in Mod. Lang. Notes 19.235, and by G. L. Hamilton, ibid. 20.80.

815-817. Compare Fil. 1.27:

Il viso aveva adorno di bellezza Celestiale.

Compare also Fil. 4.100. Dryden seems to have remembered this passage of Chaucer in Absalom and Achitophel 30.

825. Chaucer's slydynge of corage echoes Benoit, Troie 5286:

Mais sis corages li chanjot, and Guido, Historia, sig. e 2, a, col. 2: "animi constantiam non servasset." In Dares and in Joseph, who know nothing of the loves of Briseis, there is no mention of her fickleness.

827-840. Chaucer's portrait of Troilus is less dependent on sources than are the portraits of Diomedes and Criseyde; but

Notes to 5. 806-852

Joseph of Exeter's description (4.60-3) has contributed several details:

Troilus in spacium surgentes explicat artus,
Mente gigas, etate puer, nullique secundus
Audendo virtutis opus; mixtoque vigore
Gratior illustres insignit gloria vultus.

In the margin of stanza 119, the scribe of J has written: "Troilus in spacium/surgentes expli/cat arcus/Mente gigas eta/te puer, mixtoque/vigore"; and in the margin of stanza 120: "Nullique secundus/virtutis opis." In Gg, between lines 826 and 827, the scribe has written:

Versus Troilus in spacium surgentes explicat artus
Versus Mente gigas etate puer mixtoque vigore
Versus Nullique secundus audendo virtutis opis.

It is to be noted that, both in J and Gg, the words mixtoque vigore are transposed from their proper place.

In the prose Dares (Cap. 12), the portrait of Troilus is very brief: "Troilum magnum, pulcherrimum, pro aetate valentem, fortem, cupidum virtutis." Benoit, Troie 5393-446, expands these hints without adding any significant details. See also Guido, Historia, sig. e 2, b, col. 1-2.

832. Beste entecched, imbued with best qualities; see NED s.v. Entach.

835-837. Chaucer is here following Joseph; see preceding note. In 2.158, however, Troilus is "The wise, worthi Ector the secounde"; see note on that passage. Duryng don, daring to do (see NED s.v. Dare, vb. 1, 6), translates Joseph's audendo. S1 has marginal gloss: "audendo." The phrase proved puzzling to some of the scribes; see variant readings of lines 837, 840.

842. Boccaccio, Fil. 6.9, puts this episode on the fourth day after Criseida's departure from Troy. Chaucer gains in irony by making the scene synchronous with the eager waiting of Troilus.

850. Ethe, easy; see NED s.v. Eath.

852. Spiced wine, served as a light entertainment offered to guests between meals, or at the very end of the evening; compare Squire's Tale, F 291-5, where it is served between dinner and supper, and see 3.674 and note. Compare also Gawain and the Green Knight 979-80.

Troilus & Criseyde

883-884. From Fil. 6.15:

Li Troian son, si può dire, in prigione.

892. Chaucer uses Manes as equivalent to "infernal deities." Compare Virgil, Georg. 1.243; Aen. 6.743; Statius, Theb. 8.84, where Manes is used as a metaphor for poenae or supplicia. The Greeks will strike terror even to the deities of hell.

897. Ambages, equivocations, ambiguities; see NED s.v. Ambage. Chaucer has taken over the word from Fil. 6.17:

Se Calcas per ambage e per errori.

He thinks it necessary to explain the word in line 898.

932-938. Tydeus, Diomedes's father, King of Calydon, led the expedition of the seven against Thebes. He was killed in battle, and his death was a severe blow to Polynices, whose cause Tydeus was supporting. Compare 5.1501. Chaucer is translating Fil. 6.24:

Se'l padre mio Tideo fosse vissuto,
Com'el fu morto a Tebe combattendo,
Di Calidonia e d'Argo saria suto
Re, siccom'io ancora essere intendo.

938. Polymytes, Polynices; compare 5.1488, 1507.

940. The subject of ben is implied in the pronoun your of the preceding line. Note the scribal emendations of Ph and Cx.

953-1008. Criseyde's reply to Diomedes follows closely Fil. 6.26-31. Lines 1000-3, however, are from Benoit; see note below.

971. The Orkney Islands, off the north coast of Scotland, are the most northwesterly, and India the most southeasterly regions of the habitable globe, according to medieval geography. Dante thought of the mouths of the Ganges as ninety degrees east from Jerusalem (Purg. 2.5); and medieval maps show India as extending south and east from China. In Wife of Bath's Prologue, D 824, Denmark and India are mentioned as extreme limits; compare also Pardoner's Tale, C 722; Duchess 889; Boethius, 3. m 5. The Orcades are mentioned as a remote region by Juvenal, Sat. 2.161.

975. Compare 1.97.

977. Criseyde invokes Pallas (Minerva) as a female deity, and as patroness of Troy. The invocation is repeated in 5.999. Compare also 2.425.

Notes to 5. 883-1020

992-993. "When I see what I have never yet seen, then I will do what I have never done." Should the Greeks win the town of Troy, Criseyde may relent.

1000-1001. Compare Benoit, Troie 13677-9:

Si poëz bien estre certains,
S'a ço me voleie aproismier,
Nul plus de vos n'avreie chier.

These lines are spoken by Briseida to Diomedes, as he accompanies her on her ride from Troy to the Grecian camp. There is no corresponding speech in Guido.

1002-1003. Compare Benoit, Troie 13673-5:

Ne jo nos refus autrement.
Mais n'ai corage ne talent
Que vos ne autre aim aparmains.

Chaucer's lines are nearer to Guido, Historia, sig. i 2, b, col. 1: "Amoris tui oblationem ad presens nec repudio nec admitto."

1010-1011. Compare Benoit, Troie 15053-6.

1013. This detail is not found in Filostrato. Benoit says, Troie 13709-11:

Un de ses guanz li a toleit,
Que nus nel set ne aparceit:
Mout s'en fait liez.

Guido, Historia, sig. i 2, b, col. 1-2: Bellum sextum, says: "unam de cirothecis quam Briseida gerebat in manu ab ea, nullo percipiente, furtive subtraxit." Both in Benoit and in Guido, this taking of the glove is at the end of Briseida's ride from Troy to her father's tent.

1016-1020. Venus was evening star. As such, she followed the Sun in her setting, and by her bright shining in the western sky pointed to the place where he had gone down. Cynthia, the Moon, was urging the horses of her chariot to reach the end of the sign Leo—so that the ten days are nearly ended (cf. 4.1590-6). Since the Moon and the Sun (4.32) are both in Leo, the Moon is not visible; and Signifer's candles would therefore shine brightly. Signifer is the zodiacal belt which "carries" the twelve signs. For the word Signifer, see Claudian, In Rufinum 1.365, and Pliny, Nat. Hist. 2.10.7. ¶ 48.

Troilus & Criseyde

1023-1024. Compare 2.601-2; 3.1541-2.

1030. Gostly should mean "spiritually, devoutly." In the present context, it seems to mean "with the certitude which pertains to things of the spirit."

1037-1039. The episode of the "faire baye stede," which is found neither in Boccaccio nor in Guido, is taken from Benoit, Troie 15079-172. Diomedes had captured the steed of Troilus, and had presented it to Briseida. When Diomedes loses his own charger, he asks Briseida to give him the horse of Troilus. Briseida says she will lend it to him. Compare 1.1073, where Troilus mounts his "stede bay," and 2.624. Benoit does not specify the color of the horse.

1040-1041. The episode of the brooch is from Fil. 8.8-10, where Troilo discovers it on a cloak which Deiphobus has captured from Diomedes. Compare 5.1646-66.

1042-1043. From Benoit, Troie 15176-9:

La destre manche de son braz
Nueve e fresche d'un ciglaton
Li baille en lieu de confanon.
Joie a cil qui por li se peine.

The episode is not found in Boccaccio nor in Guido.

1044-1050. Chaucer found the material for this stanza, which has no counterpart in Filostrato, in Benoit, Troie 20131-46, 20202-28. He might also have found it in Guido, Historia, sig. k 6, b, col. 2—sig. l 1, a, col. 1: Bellum undecimum. With line 1045, compare also Troie 555-8 (from the introductory resumé).

1051-1085. This passage, which has no counterpart in Boccaccio, is based on a long speech of Briseida in Troie 20237-340. Compare in particular the following lines:

De mei n'iert ja fait bon escrit
Ne chantee bone chançon. (20237-8)
... ..
Lòr paroles de mei tendront
Les dames que a Troie sont.
Honte i ai fait as dameiseles
Trop lait e as riches puceles. (20257-60)

... ..

Notes to 5. 1023-1092

E que me vaut, se m'en repent ?
En ço n'a mais recouvrement.
Serai donc a cestui leiaus,
Qui mout est proz e bons vassaus. (20275-8)

. . . . .
Trop poüsse ore consirer
E plaindre e mei desconforter
E endurer jusqu'a la mort :
N'eüsse ja de la confort. (20291-4)

. . . . .
Ensi est or, jo n'en sai plus.
Deus donge bien a Troïlus !
Quant nel puis avoir, ne il mei,
A cestui me doing e otrei. (20317-20)

In Guido, Historia, sig. l 1, a, col. 1 : Bellum undecimum, the final surrender of Briseida to Diomedes is treated only in a brief summary.

1062. My belle shal be ronge, my infamy will be proclaimed ; compare 2.804-5. This is apparently a proverbial phrase ; compare Gower, Conf. Am. 2.1727-9 :

How Perse after his false tunge
Hath so thenvious belle runge,
That he hath slain his oghne brother.

(i.e. Perseus spread abroad lying stories that Demetrius had slain his own brother.) Compare also Lydgate, Compl. of Black Knight 262 :

And Fals-Report so loude rong the belle.

1084. "I leave you through no fault of yours."

1086-1092. It is true, as Chaucer says, that his authors do not say in so many words how long a time elapses before Criseyde surrenders to Diomedes ; but if one takes careful heed of the time-indications in the book of Benoît, one finds that between the arrival of Briseida at the Grecian camp and her final acceptance of Diomedes there is an interval of at least twenty-one months. Briseida arrives in the truce between the Seventh and Eighth Battles. The Eighth Battle lasts a month (Troie 14516), and is followed by a truce of six months (15187). The short Ninth Battle is followed by a truce of one month (15221). It is in the

Troilus & Criseyde

Tenth Battle that Hector is killed. At the end of the Eleventh Battle a year has passed since his death (17489). Between the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Battles there is a truce of two months (19384). Between the Fourteenth and Fifteenth there is a week's truce (20060). It is in the Fifteenth Battle that Diomedes is severely wounded. Shortly thereafter Briseida surrenders. The total elapsed time can hardly be less than two full years.

1095. I adopt the reading punysshed, which has a preponderance of MS. authority. I regard publisshed of H2RCxPhTh as a scribal substitution of a more familiar for a less familiar phrase. It is to be noted that, though H2 reads publisshed, the closely related H4 reads punysshid. Criseyde's name, her reputation, has been so widely punished, that her guilt needs no other penalty.

1107. H4 glosses "laurigerus"; and the closely related H2 reads: "The Laurer Laurgerus crowned Phebus." Compare Ovid, Art. Am. 3.389: "Visite laurigero sacrata Palatia Phoebos."

1110. H4 glosses: "nîsus: rex; douhter: allauda." Scylla, daughter of King Nîsus, was metamorphosed into the bird "ciris" (Ovid, Met. 8.11-151), which is identified with the lark. Compare Virgil, Georg. 1.405-9.

1115. Come, preterite subjunctive.

1124. Doone represents the O.E. gerundive dōnne, and is here dissyllabic.

1126. The hour of dinner was about 10 a.m.; see 2.1557, and Shipman's Tale, B 1394-444. Criseyde could not remain to dinner with her father, and have time to reach Troy before noon. Troilus and Pandarus go to a late dinner at noon (line 1129).

1134. "Fortune intends to beguile them both." Compare 4.3.

1140. Troilus will see that the city gate is kept open longer than usual; compare 5.1177-80.

1162. Just what sort of a vehicle a fare-carte may be is not clear. I have found no other instance of the phrase. It would seem to mean a cart used for merchandise, and not, therefore, the sort of vehicle in which a lady would travel. Fil. 7.8 has merely carro. H2H4 substitute a soory carte.

1174-1175. "From the hazel-wood, where jolly Robin played," i.e. from the land of fancy. It will never come at all. Robin and Marion were hero and heroine of many thirteenth century pas-

Notes to 5. 1095-1321

tourelles, and were taken over by Adam de la Halle into his Gieus de Robin et de Marion (end of thirteenth century) a pastoral comedy which continued its popularity into the fifteenth century. See Monmerqué et Michel, Théâtre Français au Moyen Age 26-8, 102-35, and compare Twelfth Night 4.2.78.

1176. "Good-bye to the snow of last year"; see NED s.v. Fernyear. Some of the scribes, misunderstanding the word, changed it to feverer, February; see variant readings. This proverbial phrase, which means "It is all done and finished," appears in Villon's famous Ballade des Dames du Temps Jadis: "Mais où sont les neiges d'antan!"

1177-1180. These lines follow closely Fil. 7.11.

1185. The grounds on which Troilus believed that he had miscounted his day are clearer in Boccaccio. Troilo decides that Criseida had meant to say that she would remain ten days with her father, and then return. He should have expected her, then, on the eleventh day (Fil. 7.12-13). The promise of the Italian Criseida was not couched in terms of the Moon's progress. Chaucer's Troilus thinks he has misunderstood the precise position of the Moon which was to mark her return; or perhaps he thinks that he has miscalculated the Moon's position.

1187-1190. Compare 4.1590-6.

1212-1214. From Fil. 7.18: "e 'l nemico Spirto di gelosia"; compare 3.808, 837, 1010.

1219. Defet, see note to 5.618.

1222. Potente, a staff with a cross-piece to lean upon; see NED s.v. Potent, sb. and compare Summoner's Tale, D 1776.

1233-1243. The dream of Troilus is taken from Fil. 7.23-4. In the Italian, however, the boar is tearing out Criseida's heart with his claws—but Criseida "quasi piacere Prendea di ciò che fece l' animale."

1275-1278. Pandarus, who had previously (5.360-85) denied the significance of dreams, now takes the more orthodox position that dreams deceive us because we wrongly interpret them. On the difficulty of interpretation, see Albertus Magnus, De Somno et Vigilia 3.2.9. Chaucer is following closely Fil. 7.40.

1317-1421. The letter of Troilus is freely adapted from Fil. 7.52-75.

Troilus & Criseyde

1322. Since "Nature abhors a vacuum," space is always occupied by matter.

1348. Fil. 7.54 gives the time as forty days.

1368. "Receptacle of every sorrow."

1375-1379. These lines, which have no counterpart in Boccaccio, resemble Duchess 599-616. Compare Rose (Langlois) 4293-330.

1431. "Bottomless promises," i.e. without foundation; see NED s.v. Bottomless, 1 b.

1432-1433. Troilus may spend his time blowing on an ivy leaf to make a squeaking noise. He will have no more amusing occupation; for Criseyde will not return. So Theseus, explaining to Palamon and Arcite that one or the other of them must be disappointed in his love for Emily, says, Knight's Tale, A 1837-8:

That oon of yow, al be him looth or leef,
He moot go pypen in an ivy leef.

Compare Usk, Testament of Love 3.7.50: "He may pype with an yve-lefe; his frute is fayled." See Hazlitt, p. 486: "To pipe with an ivy leaf, to go and engage in any sterile or idle occupation."

1440. I adopt the reading ne no word of H4RCx, which receives additional support from H3Gg. No is necessary to the metre, unless word be pronounced as a dissyllable with vocalic r.

1443-1449. Compare 5.1233-43. Troilus adopts the belief that dreams are divine revelations. Compare note on 5.360-85, and see 5.1714-15.

1450. The term sibyl is used generically for a female prophet. Isidore of Seville says, Etymol. Lib. 8, Cap. 8: "Sicut enim omnis vir prophetans, vel vates dicitur, vel propheta, ita omnis femina prophetans Sibylla vocatur. Quod nomen ex officio, non ex proprietate vocabuli est." Cassandra is called "Sibille" in Gower, Conf. Am. 5.7451-5. G. C. Macaulay in his note on that passage cites Godfrey of Viterbo, Pantheon (ed. 1584), p. 214. Hamilton, p. 158, quotes the passage from Pistorius, Scriptores de Rebus Germanicis 2.157: "Fuit igitur haec Sibylla Priami regis filia, et ex matre Hecuba procreata. Vocata est autem in Graeco Tiburtina; Latine vero Albunea nomine, vel Cassandra." Chaucer, following some such authority, clearly regards the names Sibille and Cassandre as alternative names of the same person.

1451. Cassandra was the second of the three daughters of Priam and Hecuba, and so own sister to Troilus (Troie 2953). She predicted the ruin of Troy if Paris should wed a Greek wife. Her prophecies are disregarded; and on two occasions she is locked in her room so that people may not have to listen to her. See the Table des Noms Propres in Constans' edition of Troie. In Filostrato (7.77-102), Deiphebus overhears a lament of Troilo from which he discovers that his brother is pining away for love of Criseida. He communicates the fact to his other brothers. They send their sisters to comfort Troilo; but Cassandra taunts him with his love for the daughter of a wicked priest, a lady below his princely rank. Troilo rebukes her for talking too much, and for prying into secrets. It is Chaucer who makes her the interpreter of Troilus' dream. In Boccaccio (Fil. 7.25-8), Troilo interprets the dream himself.

1459-1461. The "fewe of olde stories" may be found in the Thebais of Statius and the Metamorphoses of Ovid.

1464-1479. The story of the Calydonian boar is told by Ovid, Met. 8.270-444.

1472. A mayde, Atalanta.

1480-1481. Chaucer's authority for the statement that Tydeus was descended from Meleager is found in Fil. 7.27:

Questo cinghiar ch'io vidi è Diomede,
Perocchè l'avolo uccise il cinghiaro
Di Calidonia, se si può dar fede
A'nostri antichi.

As a matter of fact, "olde bookes" and "nostri antichi" report that Tydeus was brother to Meleager. It was the uncle of Diomede who killed the boar, and not the grandfather (avolo). In Gen. Deorum, Lib. 9, Boccaccio gives the family relationships correctly.

1482-1483. The story of Meleager's death is told by Ovid, Met. 8.445-525. His mother, Althaea, incensed at Meleager's killing of her two brothers, threw into the fire the fatal brand. As it consumed in the flames, Meleager died.

1485-1491. This stanza summarizes the first two books of the Thebais of Statius. The form Polymytes (or Polymite) for Poly- nices is used consistently by Chaucer (cf. 5.938), and is found in the Latin summary which follows 5.1498. For this form, see Roman de Thèbes, ed. Constans, Vol. 2, p. clix, n. 1.

Troilus & Criseyde

1492-1494. Hemonydes, i.e. Maeon, son of Haemon, was one of fifty Thebans sent by Eteocles to waylay Tydeus. The latter, single-handed, slew forty-nine of the company, but spared Maeon that he might return to Thebes and tell the story. His return is told near the beginning of the third book of the Thebais. The latter part of the book contains the prophecies of Amphiparaus.

1495-1498. These lines summarize books IV and V of the Thebais. The "holy serpent," sent by Jupiter, kills Archemorus, infant son of King Lycurgus.

1498. After line 1498, all the authorities, except H4R, contain in the body of the text twelve lines of Latin verse, which summarize the twelve books of the Thebais of Statius. This summary is expanded by Chaucer in lines 1485-510. The Latin verses are inserted in the middle of the passage, apparently by way of justification for the English summary. Their presence is probably due to Chaucer himself; but, since they are omitted by H4 and R, which in Book V represent the poem in its final state, and since they are in the nature of a gloss, I have relegated them to the bottom of the page. This argument of the Thebais is printed in the Delphin edition, 2.592, and in the edition of Lemaire. M. Manitius, in Rheinisches Museum für Philologie 57.397-8 (1902), prints the summary from a thirteenth century MS. of Statius in the Royal Library at Dresden. See also article by G. L. Hamilton in Mod. Lang. Notes 23.127.

The summary is found in H2 (though here a MS. closely related to H4) with a unique additional line: "Fervidus ypomedon timidique in gurgite mersus." Timidique is a corrupt reading of tumidoque. The line is taken from a twelve-line argument to the ninth book of the Thebais found in certain MSS.; see Delphin ed. 3.1251, and compare 5.1502-3. The phrase "holy serpent" in line 1497 echoes (as Dr. F. P. Magoun has pointed out to me) the "sacro serpente" of the twelve-line argument to Book V. Chaucer clearly knew these arguments; but his summary contains details which they do not mention.

1499. The sixth book of Statius is devoted to the funeral of Archemorus. His body is burned on a splendid pyre, and the ashes are placed in a magnificent tomb. Elaborate games are instituted in his honor. In Roman de Thèbes 2621-30, the child is buried, unburned, in a marble tomb. Though the Latin summary reads "Archemori bustum," the reading Archymoris burying seems to be authentic. Brennyng of Gg and D is probably a scribal emendation introduced independently by these unrelated MSS. Note, however, the reading buryng of ClH1J.

1500. See note on 2.100-8. The death of Amphiararus is told at the end of the seventh book of the Thebais.

1501. See Thebais VIII.

1502-1503. See Thebais IX. Hippomedon is drowned in the river Ismenus. Parthenopaeus died of wounds received at the hands of Dryas.

1504-1505. See Thebais X. Capaneus scaled the walls of Thebes, and from their height hurled rocks into the city. In his pride he shouted blasphemous defiance against the gods. Jupiter struck him dead with a thunderbolt.

1506-1508. See Thebais XI.

1509. See Thebais XII. Argyve, i.e. Argia, wife of Polynices, bewails her slain husband. Compare note to 4.762.

1510. After the repulse of the Greek assault on Thebes, Creon refuses to permit the burial of the slain Greeks. The widows appeal to Theseus, who marches against Thebes, captures the city, slays Creon, and gives funeral honors to the fallen Greeks. Compare Knight's Tale, A 893-1004. Neither in the Thebais nor in the Knight's Tale does Theseus burn the city. In Roman de Thèbes 10131 he hurls fire into the city. The Latin summary contains the word "ignem" (for which one should probably read ignes); but the reference is to funeral fires.

1527-1533. This brief summary of the story of Alcestis, who died that her husband Admetus might live, resembles that in Legend, B 510-16, A 498-504. In what book Chaucer read the story has not been determined; but, as Skeat has shown (Oxford Chaucer 3. xxix), all the details which Chaucer mentions are contained in the short account given by Boccaccio in De Genealogia Deorum, Lib. 13, Cap. 1. In the Legend, Chaucer adds, apparently out of his own fancy, that Alcestis was changed into a daisy. Gower tells the story, with some modifications and elaborations, in Conf. Am. 7.1917-49, as an example of woman's truth and love.

1540. Drieth, endures, suffers; see NED s.v. Dree, vb. The variant reading dryveth is certainly a scribal corruption.

1541-1545. For the conception of Fortune as the agency of divine providence, see 3.617 and note. The present passage is clearly influenced by Dante, Inf. 7.78-82:

Ordinò general ministra e duce [Fortuna]
Che permutasse a tempo li ben' vani
Di gente in gente e d'uno in altro sangue,
Oltre la difension de'senni umani.
Perché una gente impera e l'altra langue.

1545. Smytted, tarnished, sullied, brought to disgrace; see NED s.v. Smit, vb., 1 c.

1546. For the metaphor, see NED s.v. Feather, sb., 1 b.

1548. Parodie seems to be a mistaken adaptation of the French periode. CpH1H4 gloss the word "duracioun." Lydgate has taken over the word from Chaucer; see citations of NED s.v. Parody, sb. 2. The word appears as paryode in Caxton's edition of the Pilgrimage of the Sowle (NED s.v. Period). NED cites no instance of period, correctly spelled, earlier than 1530.

1548-1561. The episode of Hector's death, which is not in Filostrato, is told at length by Benoit, Troie 16007-316. That Chaucer is following Benoit is shown by the following passage (16215-28).

Li cri i sont grant e li hu, ·
Qu'Ector ot un rei abatu;
Prendre le vout e retenir
E as lor par force tolir:
Par la ventaille le teneit,
Fors de la presse le traeit,
De son escu ert discoverz.
E quant l'aparceit li coilverz,—
C'est Achillès qui le haeit,—
Cele part est alez tot dreit.
Dreit a lui broche le destrier:
Nel pot guarir l'auberc doblier
Que tot le feie e le poumon
Ne li espande sor l'arçon.

Notes to 5. 1540-1764

The corresponding passage in Guido (Historia, sig. i 6, a, col. 1: Bellum octavum) is less detailed. Compare, however: "Quod Achilles, dum persensit Hectorem ante pectus scuti sui subsidium non habere, accepta quadam lancea valde forti, non advertente Hectore, velociter in Hectorem irruit," which suggests Chaucer's "Unwar of this."

1558. The aventail is the "movable front or mouthpiece of a helmet, which may be raised to admit fresh air"; see NED s.v. Aventail, Ventail.

1562-1563. The lamentations of the Trojans at the death of Hector are recounted by Benoit, Troie 16317-502. See in particular lines 16357-9:

La est li dueus si angoissos,
Si pesmes e si doloros
Que nus nel porreit reconter.

The corresponding account in Guido is found in Historia, sig. i 6, col. 1-2: Sepultura Hectoris. But Chaucer is following Fil. 8.1:

L' alto dolor, da non poter mai dire.

1564-1589. From Fil. 8.1-5.

1590-1631. This letter of Criseyde has no counterpart in Filostrato.

1634. Kalendes of chaunge, the beginning of a change; compare 2.7 and note. Chaucer seems here to be playing on a phrase, "calends of exchange," which is cited by NED s.v. Calends, 3 a.

1646-1666. This episode follows closely Fil. 8.8-10; it is not found in Benoit or in Guido. Compare 5.1040-1. Neither Chaucer nor Boccaccio mentions the giving of this brooch in his account of the final parting of Troilus and Criseyde. Compare, however, 3.1356-8, where Criseyde gives Troilus a brooch of gold and azure.

1653. Lollius, compare 1.394, and see Introd., pp. xxxvi-xl.

1709-1715. Troilus insists that it is now proved that dreams are divine revelations; compare 5.360-85, 1443-9 and notes.

1748-1750. These lines point briefly the same moral given later at more length in lines 1835-48. Compare 3.836.

1751-1764. Chaucer is following Fil. 8.25-6. The martial exploits of Troilus are recounted at length by Benoit, Troie 19955-20156, 20462-600, 20832-7, 21005-189.

Troilus & Criseyde

1771. Dares, see Introd., pp. xxi-xxii.

1777-1785. These lines foreshadow the Legend of Good Women, which was written shortly after Troilus. See in particular Legend, B 485-9, 2387, 2546.

1778. Penelope is apparently to be accented on the first and third syllables; compare Cant. Tales, B 75.

1786-1799. These stanzas constitute an envoy to the poem; but at line 1800 the narrative is resumed, and at line 1856 we find a second envoy. With lines 1786-8, compare Fil. 9.8:

Or va' : ch'io prego Apollo che ti presti
Tanto di grazia ch'ascoltata sii,
E con lieta risposta a mè t'invii.

These lines conclude Filostrato. For further examples of the "Go little book" conceit, which goes back to the Parve, nec invideo, sine me, liber ibis in Urbem of Ovid, Tristia 1.1.1, see Tatlock, "The Epilog of Chaucer's Troilus," Mod. Phil. 18.627-30.

1786. See note to 1.4, and Introd., pp. xlix-l.

1788. Having brought to conclusion the "tragedy" of Troilus, Chaucer naturally prays that he may now write a "comedy." (For the definition of "comedy," see note to 1.4.) It is not necessary to assume that Chaucer had any specific work in mind. The modern reader is tempted to think of the comédie humaine of the Canterbury Tales, certainly begun as early as 1387, and perhaps already in the poet's mind; but it is doubtful whether that work would have been designated as comedia by a medieval critic.

1789-1792. Statius concludes his Thebais with a prayer (12. 816-17) that the poem may live; but he warns his book not to emulate the Aeneid;

nec tu divinam Aeneida tempta,
Sed longe sequere, et vestigia semper adora.

With these lines in mind, Chaucer bids his poem not to be emulous, but to be subject to all great poetry, and to kiss the footsteps, wherever his book may see Virgil, Ovid, Homer, Lucan, and Statius walking by. Boccaccio, in ending Filocolo, addresses "piccolo mio libretto" in a long envoy, which may well have been modelled on Statius, in which, among many other injunctions, he bids it to leave to great geniuses the great verses of Virgil, to leave to soldiers the verses of Lucan and of Statius. Let successful lovers follow Ovid. Seek not to be present where the measured verses of Dante are read, "il quale tu, siccome piccolo servidore, molto dei reverente seguire." Too much weight must not be attached to the fact that Boccaccio here names four of the five poets mentioned by Chaucer; they are the great names of narrative verse. Nothing else in Filocolo furnishes so close a parallel to Chaucer as the "vestigia semper adora" of Statius.

Notes to 5. 1771-1827

1791. Space, to walk (Latin spatiari); see NED s.v. Space, vb. 6. ClPhH4Th read pace; but of these authorities Ph and H4 are not reliable, and Th presents an edited text. The MS. authority is overwhelmingly in favor of space.

1793-1796. This passage suggests Chaucer's lines addressed to Adam, his own scrivener; see Introd., p. x. One of the causes which actually contributed to the corruption of Chaucer's text was the "gret diversite" of English dialects. MS. S1, for example, is colored by the native speech of its Scottish scribe. Diversity of dialect, and the changes in the spoken speech which were already under way in the poet's life-time, resulted in much "mismetring" of his text. See further Tatlock, "The Epilog to Chaucer's Troilus." Mod. Phil. 18.626, n. 1.

1797. One can hardly suppose that such a poem as Troilus was ever sung. Skeat suggested that songe means "read aloud, recited in an intoned voice." There is evidence in the poem itself that Chaucer had in mind a public reading of his poem. I suspect that the use of sing in connection with a poem is a conventional survival; compare Gower, Conf. Am. 3.330-1:

Ha, who herde evere singe or rede
Of such a thing as that was do?

1800-1806. This stanza is adapted from Fil. 8.27, which ends with the line:

Miseramente un dì l'uccise Achille.

Benoit, Troie 21190-450, relates how, in the Nineteenth Battle, Achilles slew Troilus, and dragged his dead body at the tail of his horse; compare note to 3.374-5.

1807-1827. These stanzas are closely imitated from Tes. 11. 1-3 where Boccaccio is describing the death of Arcita:

Troilus & Criseyde

Finito Arcita colei nominando,
La qual nel mondo più che altro amava,
L'anima lieve se ne gî volando
Ver la concavità del cielo ottava ;
Degli elementi i convessi lasciando,
Quivi le stelle erratiche ammirava,
L'ordine loro e la somma bellezza,
Suoni ascoltando pien d'ogni dolcezza.

Quindi si volse in giù a rimirare
Le cose abbandonate, e vide il poco
Globo terreno, a cui d'intorno il mare
Girava e l'aere, e di sopra il foco,
Ed ogni cosa da nulla stimare
A rispetto del ciel ; ma poi al loco
Là dove aveva il suo corpo lasciato
Gli occhi fermò alquanto rivoltato.

E seco rise de'pianti dolenti
Della turba lerne; la vanitate
Forte dannando delle umane genti,
Lì qua' da tenebrosa cecitate,
Mattamente oscurata nelle menti,
Seguon del mondo la falsa biltate,
Lasciando il cielo ; e quindi se ne gîo
Nel loco a cui Mercurio la sortio.

It will be noticed that Chaucer's lines correspond, stanza by stanza, with Boccaccio's. The passage in Teseide finds its suggestion in the Somnium Scipionis of Cicero (De Re Publica, Lib. 6). One may consult Chaucer's summary of the passage in Parliament 29-84. For further discussion of this passage, which was not in Chaucer's first draft of Troilus, see Introd., p. lxxii.

1809-1813. Teseide 11.1 reads:

Ver la concavità del cielo ottava.

This strongly supports the reading eighte, which I adopt on the authority of JRCx, as against seventhe, the reading of γS1Th+H3Ph (on inset leaf), which I regard as a γ error introduced into H3 and Ph (see Introd., p. lxxviii). It is to be noted that the evidence of Gg is lost through mutilation of the volume. Scribal substitution of vij for viii is an easy corruption.

If we accept eighte as correct, (and we must accept Boccaccio's ottava, which falls under the rhyme), it remains to determine which of the spheres is meant. The old astronomy assumes eight star-bearing spheres, concentric with the Earth, of which seven carry, each, one of the planets, and the last contains the fixed stars. These spheres are numbered sometimes from the Earth outwards, as in Dante's Paradiso, sometimes in the reverse order, beginning with the planet Saturn, as in Chaucer's Complaint of Mars (where in line 29 Mars is lord of the third heaven). So also Gower, Conf. Am. 7.721-946, begins with the Moon and ends with Saturn. By this numbering, the eighth sphere is the sphere of the fixed stars, beyond the spheres of the planets. In Franklin's Tale, F 1280, and Astrolabe 1.21.55, the "eighte spere" is that of the fixed stars. But Boccaccio's stanzas are derived from the Somnium Scipionis of Cicero; and there the spheres ("globi") are numbered "a summo in imum," the Earth itself being "media et nona" (Cap. 17). It is in this order that Chaucer names the planetary gods in 3. 715-32. On this principle, the eighth sphere is that of the Moon, the nearest to the Earth. In support of this interpretation it may be noted (1) that Troilus, though able to see the planets "with ful avysement," is near enough to Earth to distinguish the spot "ther he was slayn," which he could hardly do from the eminence of the outermost sphere. (2) The line "In convers letyng everich element" refers clearly to terrestrial regions. According to the old cosmogony, the four elements are arranged, according to their lightness, in four layers: earth, water, air, fire (see Macrobius, Comm. in Somn. Scip. 1.22). Troilus, in his flight upwards, leaves behind him "in convers." (Is this an error for in convess, i.e. "in convex"? Boccaccio says "Degli elementi i convessi lasciando"; see NED s.v. Convers.) the elements of air and fire, and approaches the sphere of the Moon. So Dante and Beatrice mount upwards from the summit of the Mount of Purgatory, through the heaven of fire, to the sphere of the Moon. While passing through the heaven of fire, they first hear the harmony of the spheres (Par. 1.77-81), as Troilus hears it from his station in the "eighte spere." It is possible that Boccaccio, following the Somnium Scipionis, meant the sphere of the Moon, but that Chaucer understood it to be that of the fixed stars. It must be remembered, on the other hand, that, in Cicero, Scipio takes his stand in the Milky Way (Cap. 16.) Compare note to 3.1-2.

1812-1813. The allusion to the harmony of the spheres is from Teseide. Boccaccio found it in Somnium Scipionis, Cap. 18. Compare Parliament 59-63.

1814-1819. Compare Somnium Scipionis, Cap. 19-20: "te sedem etiam nunc hominum ac domum contemplari; quae si tibi parva, ut est, ita videtur, haec caelestia semper spectato, illa humana contemnito. . . . Omnis enim terra, quae colitur a vobis . . . parva quaedam insula est circumfusa illo mari, quod Atlanticum, quod magnum, quem Oceanum appellatis in terris." (See also Parliament 57-8.) Chaucer's "pleyn felicite" is his own Boethian addition to the passage of Teseide.

1827. Compare 5.321-2 and note.

1828-1834. This stanza returns to Fil. 8.28, which repeats four times the words "Cotal fine." Chaucer's line 1832 is a more generalized moral than Boccaccio's—

Cotal fin' ebbe la speranza vana
Di Troilo in Griseida villana.

1835-1848. In the corresponding passage of Filostrato (8.29), Boccaccio addresses "yonge freshe folkes"—

O giovanetti, ne' quai coll'etate
Surgendo vien l'amoroso disio—and urges them to restrain evil appetite. They must take example from Troilo, and not lightly place faith in every beautiful lady, many of whom are vain and fickle. There is no hint of the high moral pointed by Chaucer. See Introd., pp. xlviii-l.

1837-1841. Compare Chaucer's Balade de Bon Conseyl ("Truth") 17-20:

Her nis non hoom, her nis but wilderness:
Forth, pilgrim, forth! Forth, beste, out of thy stal!
Know thy contree, look up, thank God of al;
Hold the hye wey, and lat thy gost thee lede.

Notes to 5. 1812-1856

Compare also Hoccleve, Regement of Princes 1289:

This lyf, my sone, is but a chirie-faire;

and Gower, Conf. Am. Prol. 454-5:

For al is bot a chirie feire

This worldes good, so as thei telle.

1849-1855. In this stanza, which has no counterpart in Boccaccio, Professor Tatlock sees a sort of antidote to the acceptance of the pagan gods and to the general pagan atmosphere of the poem; see "The Epilog of Chaucer's Troilus," Mod. Phil. 18. 635-59.

1853. Wise, p. 129, cites Roman de Thèbes, MS. S, 4341-2:

Cil dui [Mars et Pallas] vailent en la bataille

Plus qe toute l'autre raschaille.

1854. The context suggests that forme is here used in the sense given to forma by scholastic philosophy, i.e. "the essential principle of a thing which makes it what it is"; see NED s.v. Form, sb., 4 a. Chaucer uses the word in this sense in Legend 1582:

As matere appetyteth forme alwey.

Compare also Legend 2228. The meaning of the sentence would then be: "See what is the essential principle which informs ancient pagan poetry!", i.e. a set of false gods, and "thise wrecched worldes appetites."

1856-1859. There is nothing in Filostrato which corresponds to these lines. The poem is "directed" only to Boccaccio's lady. But in other works of Boccaccio—Ameto, Life of Dante, Dé Casibus, De Genealogia—the book is addressed to a patron, with the request for revision and correction. For these and other parallels to Chaucer's lines, see Tatlock, "The Epilog to Chaucer's Troilus," Mod. Phil. 18.631-5. Compare 3.1405-12, and Second Nun's Tale, G 78-84.

1856. There can be no doubt that "moral Gower" is the poet, John Gower. He had already written his French poem, Mirour de l'Omme (about 1376-79), and his Latin poem, Vox Clamantis (soon after 1381). Each of these poems contains a moral analysis of human life and existing institutions which justifies Chaucer's epithet "moral," i.e. a writer of moral precepts" (see NED s.v. Moral, adj., 3 a). In Confessio Amantis (first version apparently published 1390), Gower returns the compliment of Chaucer's dedication by a graceful address to his brother poet (Conf. Am. 8.2941*-57*). The fact that this address is omitted in the later version of Conf. Am., along with the praise of King Richard, may possibly, though not necessarily, imply that, when Gower turned from the king's party, his relations with Chaucer became less friendly. (See Macaulay's ed. of Gower, 2. xxvi-xxviii.) The friendship of the two poets dates at least from 1378, when, on the occasion of his second journey to Italy, Chaucer named John Gower as one of his attorneys to act for him in his absence.

1857. The epithet "philosophical" makes it fairly certain that the person intended is Ralph Strode, who was before 1360 a fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and who was the author of important writings on logic and philosophy. "His tendencies seem to have been realistic, but he followed in the footsteps of Albert the Great, Thomas Aquinas, and Bonaventura, the inaugurators of that 'school of the middle' whose members were called nominalists by extreme realists, and realists by extreme nominalists." (DNB.) At Oxford he was an opponent of Wiclif, but seems, none the less, to have been on friendly terms with him. Apparently Strode was a poet as well as a philosopher. A fifteenth century catalogue of the fellows of Merton College says: "Nobilis poeta fuit et versificavit librum elegiacum vocatum Phantasma Radulphi" (DNB). This poem has not been identified.

In 1373, soon after the last mention of Strode in the records of Merton College, a Ralph Strode was elected Common Pleader of the City of London. He was subsequently Standing Counsel for the City and a sergeant-at-arms. He died in 1387. From 1373 to 1382, while Chaucer was living in the dwelling over Aldgate, the lawyer Strode occupied a similar mansion over the neighboring Aldersgate. There is good ground for believing that the Oxford philosopher and the London lawyer are one and the same person. For a fuller account of Strode, see the article by Sir Israel Gollancz in DNB s.v. Strode, Ralph, and an article by E. P. Kuhl, "Some Friends of Chaucer," in P.M.L.A. 29.272-5.

1863-1865. These lines are closely modeled on Dante, Par. 14.28-30:

Notes to 5. 1857-1868

Quell' Uno e Due e Tre che sempre vive,
E regna sempre in Tre e Due e Uno,
Non circonscriitto, e tutte circonscrive.

Dante and Beatrice are in the Fourth Heaven (of the Sun) among the doctors of philosophy and theology.

1866. The reading of H2R has every appearance of being a genuine  $\beta$  reading; but, since H4, closely related to H2, and Cx do not support it, I have not adopted it into the text.

1868. The reading take of H2R fits the context better than make of the other authorities. I have, however, been unwilling to adopt it into the text on the basis of such slight attestation. Compare preceding note.

The text of this convenient edition is a reprint of that given by I. Moutier, Opere Volgari di Giovanni Boccaccio, Florence, 1827-1834, Vol. 12. Citations are by canto and stanza. I have occasionally quoted from the Paris edition of 1789, where its reading differs significantly from that of the Moutier text. In this edition the numbering of cantos and stanzas is at variance with that of Moutier. Despite many omissions and obvious corruptions, this text sometimes presents a reading closer than that of Moutier to Chaucer's copy of the poem. A critical edition of Il Filostrato is greatly to be desired.

A very readable translation is that of Hubertis Cummings, Princeton, 1924. The prose translation by W. M. Rossetti, published in the Chaucer Society volume, Chaucer's Troilus and Cryseyde compared with Boccaccio's Filostrato, is convenient for purposes of comparison with the English poem, but is too fragmentary to give any adequate idea of Boccaccio's poem as a whole.
